Für verspätete Zahlungen wird ein Verzugszins von 1% pro Monat in Rechnung gestellt. Das Eigentum geht erst mit der vollständigen Bezahlung auf den Käufer über. In der Regel liefert NAC das ersteigerte Objekt nicht vor der Bezahlung an den Käufer aus. Eine allfällige frühere Auslieferung bewirkt keinen Eigentumsübergang und ändert nichts an der Zahlungsverpflichtung des Käufers. Hat der Käufer nicht sofort und auch nicht innert fünf Tagen ab Erhalt einer eingeschriebenen schriftlichen Mahnung bezahlt, so ist NAC ohne weiteres und ohne weitere Anzeige berechtigt, vom Verkauf zurückzutreten.
- 7. Versand- und Versicherungskosten erfolgen auf Kosten und Risiko des Empfängers. Im Ausland verrechnete Gebühren und Steuern gehen zulasten des Käufers (Ersteigerers). Conditions of Sale

The following terms and conditions are accepted by all persons participating in the auction:

- Auction bidding is conducted in Swiss Francs. The highest bidder who has been acknowledged by the auctioneer when the hammer falls after the third call has legally bought the lot. Bidding usually begins at 80% of the estimate, provided no higher offers have been submitted. Written bids have priority. The successful bidder has committed himself personally to the purchases made. He cannot claim to have acted on behalf of a third party.
- Absentee bidders can bid up to 24 hours before the start of the auction by writing, telephone or electronically. Telephone bidders must agree that calls may be recorded. The auction house does not accept liability for bidding mandates made by telephone, electronically or in writing.
- Bidders must show proof of identification before the auction, and subsequently be registered. The Auction House may require a bank reference and/or guarantee. The Auction House reserves the right to deny a person from participating in the auction.
- 4. The auctioneer may raise or reject a bid without giving a reason, and furthermore reserves the right to combine or split up catalogue lots, or to offer them out of sequence or omit or withdraw them from the auction.
- 5. A commission of 20.0% will be levied on the hammer price phone bidders and bidders using our Live Internet facilities pay an additional charge of 1,5%. The Swiss value added tax (VAT) of 7,7% is payable on the final price (hammer price, plus buyer's commission and any other amounts chargeable by the Auction House to the buyer). Gold coins (AV) are exempt from VAT.

If the purchases are exported, then the VAT will be refunded on production of a legally valid original export declaration issued by the Swiss Customs.

- 6. Payment is in Swiss Francs and is immediately due upon adjudication of the lot and has to be paid with the release of the object to the Buyer, unless otherwise agreed before the sale. Late payments will incur a monthly default interest of 1%. Title in a lot will not pass to the Buyer until NAC has received full payment on his account. NAC will generally not release a lot to a Buyer before payment. Earlier release of the lot does not affect its title nor the Buyer's obligation to pay. If the Buyer has failed to make immediate payment and within 5 days after receipt of a registered, written reminder by NAC to the buyer, NAC may in its sole discretion cancel the sale of the lot.
- 7. Shipping and insurance are at the buyer's cost and risk. Any fees and charges payable abroad are borne by the buyer (successful bidder) who is responsible for acquiring the necessary information about any applicable customs and foreign exchange regulations. The Auction House accepts no liability for any contraventions of such regulations.
- 8. The Auction House offers an unconditional and unlimited guarantee for the authenticity of coins. All identifications and descriptions of the items sold in this catalogue are statements of opinion and were made in good faith.
- 9. The objects which come under the hammer are auctioned on behalf of a third party or are the property of the Auction House.

 The buyer (successful bidder) has no entitlement to have the identity of the consignor disclosed to them and acknowledges that the Auction House might receive a commission from the consignor for the sale.
- 10. The above conditions are a component of each individual contract of sale concluded at the auction. Alterations must be made in writing in order to be valid. If any parts of these Terms and Conditions should be no longer or not fully in conformity with the valid legal situation, this shall not affect the content and validity of the remaining parts. The above-mentioned conditions are written in German, French, Italian and English; the only valid text is the German one.
- 11. The contractual relationship between parties is subject in all facets to Swiss law. Place of performance is the registered office of the Auction House in 8001 Zurich, and the exclusive court of jurisdiction is Zurich.

Conditions de la vente aux enchères

Du fait de la participation à la vente aux enchères, les conditions suivantes sont réputées être acceptées :

- 1. Les enchères sont effectuées en Francs Suisses. L'adjudication est réalisée après trois appels consécutifs du plus offrant dont l'offre a été acceptée par le commissaire priseur et qui constitue une obligation. La mise à prix est effectuée en règle générale à 80 %, dans la mesure où il n'y a pas d'offres disponibles et plus élevées. Les offres formulées par écrit sont prioritaires. Chaque enchérisseur s'engage personnellement en ce qui concerne les acquisitions réalisées par ses soins. Il ne peut pas faire valoir le fait d'avoir agi pour le compte d'une tierce personne.
- 2. Les demandes d'enchères par téléphone ou par écrit (également par moyen électronique) pour les personnes intéressées et non présentes sont réceptionnées jusqu'à 24 heures avant le début de la vente aux enchères. Les enchérisseurs par téléphone acceptent que la communication téléphonique puisse être enregistrée. La salle des ventes n'assume aucune responsabilité quant aux enchères effectuées par téléphone, électronique ou par écrit.
- 3. Les enchérisseurs sont priés de se légitimer avant la vente aux enchères et de se faire enregistrer à l'issue de la vente. La salle des ventes peut exiger une référence bancaire et/ou une garantie. La salle des ventes a le droit de ne pas laisser une personne participer à la vente aux enchères.
- 4. L'enchérisseur peut, à sa guise, surenchérir une offre ou bien la décliner sans indication de motifs. L'enchérisseur se réserve en outre le droit d'associer des lots, de les séparer, de faire des offres en dehors de l'ordre prévu ou de les laisser de côté, voire de se retirer de la vente aux enchères.
- 5. Une commission de 20.0% est perçue sur le prix d'adjudication. Les acquéreurs qui souhaitent participer aux enchères par téléphone ou en ligne avec nos facilités Live Internet paieront un frais supplémentaire de 1,5%. La taxe à la valeur ajoutée suisse d'un montant de 7,7 % sera perçue sur le prix définitif (prix d'adjudication plus supplément et sur tous les autres montants facturés à l'acquéreur par la salle des ventes). Les pièces de monnaie en or (AV) sont dispensées de la TVA. En cas d'exportation de l'objet adjugé vers l'étranger, l'acquéreur se voit restituer la TVA lorsqu'il est en mesure de présenter une déclaration d'exportation réglementaire, en bonne et due forme, des autorités douanières suisses.
- 6. Le prix total en francs suisses est exigible immédiatement après adjudication et doit être acquitté lors de la remise de l'objet adjugé. Pour les paiements effectués ultérieurement un intérêt moratoire de 1% par mois sera facturé. La transmission de la propriété à l'acquéreur a lieu seulement à paiement intégral. En général, NAC ne remets l'objet adjugé à l'acquéreur pas avant paiement. Une éventuelle remise de l'objet n'a cependant pas de l'influence ni sur la propriété du vendeur ni sur l'obligation de l'acquéreur de payer.
 - En cas que l'acquéreur n'a pas payé simultanément et non plus entre les cinq jours après réception d'un avertissement sous pli recommandé, NAC est en droit de se départir du contrat sans autre formalité et sans avis ultérieur.
- 7. Les frais d'envoi et d'assurance sont à charge et au risque de l'acheteur. Les taxes ou les impôts facturés à l'étranger sont à la charge de l'acquéreur (enchérisseur). Il lui incombe de s'informer au sujet des directives étrangères en matière de douane et de devises. La salle des ventes décline toute responsabilité pour les éventuelles infractions à l'encontre de ces directives.
- 8. La salle des ventes garantit l'authenticité des monnaies sans réserve et sans limitation dans le temps. Toutes les indications mentionnées dans le catalogue sont rassemblées en toute conscience et en toute bonne foi.
- 9. Les objets mis aux enchères le sont pour le compte de tierces personnes ou bien sont la propriété de la salle des ventes. L'acquéreur (enchérisseur) n'a aucun droit d'obtenir communication du nom de la personne qui met en vente et se déclare en accord avec le fait que la salle des ventes perçoive une provision de cette dernière.
- 10. Les présentes conditions font partie intégrante de tout contrat de vente conclu dans le cadre de la vente aux enchères. Les modifications ne sont valables que par écrit. Le fait que des parties des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères venaient à ne plus correspondre, ou du moins plus intégralement, à la situation juridique en vigueur, n'affecte en rien les autres parties, ni dans leur contenu, ni dans leur validité. La version en langue allemande constitue la référence des présentes conditions de vente aux enchères.
- 11. La relation contractuelle entre les parties en cause est soumise, dans toutes ses composantes, au droit Suisse. La compétence juridique est fixée au siège de la salle des ventes à 8001 Zurich, et le for juridique exclusif est Zurich.

Condizioni di vendita

La partecipazione all'asta comporta l'accettazione delle seguenti condizioni:

- 1. La valuta in cui viene condotta l'asta è il Franco Svizzero. L'aggiudicazione al miglior offerente, individuato dal banditore, avviene dopo la terza chiamata e comporta per l'aggiudicatario l'acquisto con tutti i relativi obblighi di legge. Le offerte partono generalmente dall' 80% del prezzo di stima a meno che una o più offerte d'importo maggiore siano state presentate. Le offerte scritte hanno la precedenza. Il partecipante all'asta è personalmente responsabile per l'acquisto effettuato e non può pretendere di avere agito per conto di terzi.
- 2. I partecipanti all'asta non presenti in sala possono presentare offerte telefonicamente, in forma scritta, o per via elettronica fino a 24 ore prima dell'inizio dell'asta. Chi trasmette la propria offerta telefonicamente presta il proprio consenso all'eventuale registrazione della telefonata. La casa d'asta non assume alcun tipo di responsabilità per le offerte trasmesse in forma scritta, elettronica o telefonica.
- 3. I partecipanti, per concorrere all'asta, dovranno esibire un documento d'identità e registrarsi. La casa d'asta si riserva inoltre il diritto di non permettere a un soggetto la partecipazione all'asta.
- 4. Il banditore d'asta ha facoltà di aumentare o rifiutare un'offerta secondo la propria discrezionalità e senza necessità di fornire una motivazione. - 5. Al prezzo d'aggiudicazione va aggiunta una commissione del 20.0%. Gli offerenti che parteciperanno all'asta per telefono o 'live' attraverso internet pagheranno un costo supplementare dell'1,5%. L'imposta svizzera sul valore aggiunto, pari attualmente al 7,7%, viene applicata sul prezzo finale (prezzo d'aggiudicazione più commissione ed ogni altro importo imputabile al compratore dalla casa d'aste). Le monete in oro (AV) sono esonerate dal pagamento dell'IVA. In caso d'esportazione dell'oggetto acquistato all'asta verso un paese estero, il compratore ha diritto al rimborso dell'IVA dietro consegna di una valida dichiarazione d'esportazione dell'ufficio doganale della Confederazione Elvetica.

La proprietà del lotto non passerà al compratore fino a che la NAC non riceverà il pagamento a saldo dell'acquisto. Generalmente la NAC non rilascia un lotto al compratore prima di ricevere il pagamento di tale. La consegna anticipata di un lotto non incide sulla proprietà di tale ne' sull'obbligo di pagamento da parte del compratore. Se il compratore no paga subito e nel caso in cui egli non effettui il pagamento entro 5 giorni dalla ricezione di una raccomandata, scritta da NAC come avviso di mancato pagamento, la NAC si riserverà la facoltà di cancellare la vendita di tale lotto.
- 7. I costi ed il rischio della spedizione sono a carico del destinatario. Qualunque imposta e contributo legalmente dovuto nel paese d'esportazione è a carico dell'acquirente (compratore in sede d'asta) su cui ricade la responsabilità per la conoscenza delle norme vigenti in materia doganale e di valuta. Introduction to the Important and Interesting Collection of Cypriot Coins Property of a Discerning Collector part I – lots 281-330

This is the first part of a collection of exquisite Cypriot coins in superb condition from all the known Cypriot mints. They are mostly silver coins, of different denominations and struck on different weight standards. Some gold and bronze coins complete the series. Most of the coins rarely appear on the market such as the siglos of the kingdom of Marion (lot 296), depicting a lion licking and scratching with his right back paw, his right foreleg on the obverse, and Phrixos, naked, hanging beside a ram on the reverse. On the coin the legend, written in Cypriot syllabic characters, is very well preserved, in particular on the reverse, which allows us to attribute it to Marion. Indeed, the legends on such coins are often difficult to read (e.g. BMC Cyprus, p. 71, no. 1, pl. XIII.11). On the large silver coins of Lapethos, called sigloi in Vth century achaemenid Cyprus, the names are written in Phoenician characters, e.g. the semitic name Sidquemelek (struck about 440-425), and the Greek name Demonikos, dated to the beginning of the IVth century. Such coins, which are not frequently seen on the market, show rare to unique symbols (lots 294 and 295). Two of the sigloi, presented here, are part of ancient hoards. The coin of Siromos was included in the hoard found in Afghanistan in 1969, IGCH 1820. On the obverse a kneeling humanheaded bull is represented, its head reverted, on the reverse an astragalos between the Cypriot syllabic characters pa and si. (lot 299). The siglos of Nicodamos, king of Salamis at about 450, was probably part of a hoard, probably buried in the Near East. It represents a ram on the obverse, an ankh on the reverse. The coin is overstruck on a turtle of Aegina; on the reverse, the traces of the Aeginetan skew are quite clear. This is another interesting feature of the coin (lot 310).

Three smaller denominations are very fascinating, for example the not yet published 1/6th siglos of Idalion. This coin depicts on the obverse a female head, not well understood, perhaps the head of a sphinx or of Aphrodite, on the reverse a lotus flower on two spiral tendrils in an irregular incuse square, following the contours of the type, which occurs also on sigloi, representing on the obverse a sphinx seated r. It is an earlier and larger denomination than the 1/12th obol (BMC Cyprus, p. lii (vi), pl. XIX.15). (lot 292). To this I add two 1/3rd siglos of Paphos, struck in the second half of the Vth century. They represent the usual standing bull on the obverse, a standing eagle on the reverse. The symbols in the field on both sides on the coins, an ankh on the coin of king Pny (tos?) (lot 302), a small circle on the coin of king Sa (Stasandros?) (lot 304), are rare if not unique. A small gold coin, 1/10th stater of Evagoras I, king of Salamis, is another unicum in the collection (lot 312).

These are only a few of the many rarities of this outstanding collection, and there is much more to discover, such as some coins from Amathous or unique coins that are not yet well attributed.

Anne Destrooper-Georgiades

Professor Destrooper-Georgiades has provided us with a wonderful overview of some of the most interesting coins in the collection. Allow me to add a few words on the collector and the history of the collection.

The collection was assembled with great skill and passion from the early/mid 1960s up to the early 21st century. The anonymous collector, although not Cypriot, followed his heart when he decided to collect Cypriot coins.

George Muller played a fundamental part in the creation of this collection. Our collector met George at Spink & Sons at the beginning of his collecting life and George went on to represent the collector at all the sales since the collector has never attended an auction in person. Indeed, the market referred to our collector as "the mystery collector of Cypriot coins".

The decision to remain anonymous even when actively collecting is unsurprising given the reserved nature of this gentleman. After all, he had chosen a reputable coin dealer who kept him abreast of what was on the market which might be of potential interest and who followed his collecting competently and correctly. Therefore the collector didn't necessarily feel the need to be known to other coin dealers or collectors. That said, his identity and existence were well-known within the academic community and his links with scholars of Cypriot coins and Greek coins in general were on-going and fruitful. Our collector would often visit the British Museum where he grew familiar with the various curators of the Greek coin cabinet who followed during the years our collector was living abroad, starting with Kenneth Jenkins, then Martin Price and finishing with Ute Wartenberg. In fact, it is well known that collectors of the past would often develop rapports and continually exchange opinions and advice with scholars, often keeping themselves somewhat distant from other collectors who could be seen as competitors. We are sure that BDC, Moretti, Abecassis or even our anonymous collector would never have conceded an essential coin for their collection in order to obtain another at a cheaper price.

Returning to our anonymous collector and his relationship with academics, we would like to reaffirm of how the link between collectors, coin dealers and scholars has always been fundamental in the development of numismatic research.

Cypriot coins are among the most fascinating and enigmatic coins of the ancient world. This collection represents possibly the most important collection of Cypriot coins in private hands and its dispersal presents an opportunity, perhaps unique rather than rare, to acquire specimens, all with impeccable provenances which are unlikely to reappear on the market.

To conclude this short preface, I would like to add a personal note. Numismatics offers the privilege of meeting extraordinary people and our anonymous collector is certainly one of them. Before meeting our collector for the handover of the collection, we had not spoken more than a couple of times on the telephone and yet the two days we spent together when I collected the coins were a real pleasure. I was struck by the courtesy, hospitality, and refinement of this gentleman and his charming wife and I came away with the feeling that I had spent the day with a friend whom I'd known forever.

This meeting brought me back to when I embarked on this career way back in 1995 when Madeleine Machoud was working at NAC. Formerly she had been the long-time assistant of Pierre Strauss at M&M. Madeleine would often tell me anecdotes associated with collectors of the past and their relationship with Strauss.

Madeleine would always finish such stories with the inevitable remark "back in the good old days".

This catalogue is dedicated to the memory of Professor Theodore Vern Buttrey (1929-2018)

There is so much to be said about Ted. He was not only one of the most distinguished scholars of ancient numismatics, and so much more, but for us at NAC he was first and foremost a dear friend.

Born in Havre, Montana on 29 December 1929, Ted is probably best known, at least in America, for his work discovering and exposing a scheme to distribute fake early Mexican and Western American gold bars, including pointing the finger at the traffickers. However, our readers are more likely to know him for his pre-eminence as a scholar and teacher which brought him national and international recognition in the general field of Greek literature, and particularly in ancient numismatics.

Ted was educated in America and graduated magna cum laude with a degree in Classics from Princeton University in 1950. He was awarded his Ph.D. from Princeton in 1953 for his dissertation on "Studies in the Coinage of Mark Anthony", which was published in the ANS Museum Notes of 1954 in an abridged version. After obtaining a scholarship for further study in Rome, he began his academic career at Yale University in 1954 where he held the post of instructor and assistant professor at the Department of Classical Studies from 1954 to 1964 and continued as assistant professor in the Department of Medieval Studies from 1962 to 1964. He simultaneously held the position of curator of the Yale numismatic collection from 1957 to 1964.

In 1964, he took a position at The University of Michigan as associate professor of Greek and Latin, and was promoted to full professor in 1968. From 1968-71 he served as chairman, and again in 1983-84 as acting chairman, of the Department of Classical Studies, and as director of the Kelsey Museum from 1969 to 1971. At Clare Hall, Cambridge University, he had been a Visiting Fellow and Resident Member and after retiring from Michigan he moved to Cambridge where he was an Affiliated Lecturer in the Faculty of Classics. He served as Keeper of Coins and Medals at the Fitzwilliam Museum from 1988 to 1991 and from 2008 until his death he held the post of Honorary Keeper of Ancient Coins. In this capacity, among other things, he created probably the largest collection of auction catalogues in the world.

Alongside his career in education, Ted published well over 100 books and articles ranging from a seminal work on Mexican coins to ancient numismatics which was his main focus. His first comprehensive monograph was dedicated to the "Triumviral Portrait Gold of the Quattuorviri Monetales of 42 B. C.". He also published in 2009 along with Ian Carradice the revised second volume of the RIC. Ted also worked on numerous excavations and, published the coin finds of Sardes and Morgantina, and was involved with many others.

Ted's contribution to numismatics has been recognised by countless societies and he has received various awards and prizes, among them the ANS' Huntington Medal and a gold medal of the Royal Numismatic Society where he served as its president from 1989-1993.

Ted belonged to a generation that didn't regard the commercial market and coin dealers as an enemy but rather as a precious source of information and support to the study of numismatics. With this spirit of collaboration in mind, Ted asked us the favour of keeping all the duplicate catalogues we received and my brother would regularly visit him in Cambridge to deliver them, his car weighed down with tonnes of catalogues which would end up in the library of the Fitzwilliam museum or another museum in any part of the world as a donation or exchange. To thank us for this small service, Ted volunteered to do some proof reading of our catalogues and he would often send us back drafts with his corrections or he would visit us on the weekend before going to print to re-read the proofs. To see him intent on reading our catalogues exclaiming "good stuff" when he found something interesting is one of the memories that gives me the most pleasure to recall. I will always remember with the same pleasure the incredible modesty and generosity with which Ted would speak with my father about my father's theories on Republican struck bronze coinage.

Ted was one of a kind and he had a wonderful way with words and, of course, with people. For those who knew him it is easy to understand why his university classes were famously popular. With his energy, animated manner and playful way of quoting Shakespeare and Latin, he was able to make even a tedious e-mail or scientific lecture hilarious and I have no good reason not to believe, as he told me, that his university lectures were so full of students that the university was forced to rent out cinemas as their lecture halls were too cramped! It is also no wonder Ted created television programs (Michigan Media) on great books, Homer, Herodotus, Suetonius, Greek drama and theatre, alchemy, and various broad aspects of numismatics. These shows were aired on over 75 TV stations at their peak.

His spirit and sense of humour were overwhelming and his kindness and tenacity were incredible. When somebody leaves us, very often it is said that they leave an un-fillable hole. This is certainly true in Ted's case.

From a private North European collection.

Of all the coins of Tarentum, this gold stater perhaps elicits the greatest praise for the skill and ingenuity of the engraver. The composition is masterful, and one can only imagine how this would have looked on the grand scale of a statuary group. Beyond the composition, we may revel in the quality of the engraving, which breathes life into a scene that otherwise might appear stiff and formal. The artist treats us to nothing less than an impassioned plea of young Taras to a towering, but caring figure of Poseidon, who considers the proposal. A coin type of such a highly personal nature demands a tie to history. Various opinions have been offered, which help to narrow the possibilities down to the period 342 to 330 B.C. The two events in this era that could have prompted this coinage are interventions in Southern Italy on behalf of the Tarentines by Archidamus of Sparta in 342 and Alexander the Molossian, whose more enduring (but no less disastrous) campaign began in 334. Robinson prefers the former, interpreting the scene as an allusion to the plea of Taras to its mother city Sparta. Other scholars prefer the latter, associating the coinage with Alexander, especially since the thunderbolt symbol is prominent. Robinson argues that the thunderbolt need not be taken as a certain allusion to Alexander, as it is a common symbol, and that the type is more appropriate to the relationship between colony and mother city. Though the obverse generally is not the focal point of this coinage, it is worth noting that the beautiful female head - usually described as Persephone - may actually be Hera. In particular, her stephane is decorated with palmettes in a manner identical to that worn by Hera on the staters of Elis. Also of interest is the fact that the inscription TAPA before her face has generally been missed by researchers: Robinson only hinted at what appeared to be portions of the inscription on the Gulbenkian example, though we are fortunate that Rutter, in his recent Historia Numorum Italy, includes it in his description of the type.

In around 720 B.C. Metapontum was founded in southern Italy by Achaean colonists escaping hard times in the Peloponnesos. In time all of southern Italy came to be known as Magna Graecia ("Greater Greece") because of the extensive Greek colonization there. Jealous of the fertility of the surrounding region and nursing ethnic hatreds, the Metapontum joined with the neighbouring Achaean cities of Kroton and Sybaris in destroying the Ionian colony of Siris (ca. 550 B.C.), but when conflict arose between these allies, Metapontum did nothing to save Sybaris from destruction at the hands of Kroton in 510 B.C. The city did, however, provide a safe haven for the ascetic philosopher Pythagoras and his followers after they were driven out of Kroton. In the fifth century B.C. Metapontum supported the disastrous Athenian expedition against Syracuse (414-413 B.C.) and resisted attack by Dionysios I of Syracuse, but gradually seems to have fallen into decline. By the fourth century B.C., Metapontum and other neighbouring cities were threatened by the rise of the Italic Lucanians. Although there is no evidence of direct Lucanian attack on Metapontine territory, the menace was serious enough that Metapontum entered into alliance with its long-time rival, Taras, and the Molossian king, Alexander I, with a view to breaking Italic power in 334 B.C. Unfortunately, despite several victories, Alexander was treacherously killed at the Battle of Pandosia (331 B.C.), leaving Metapontum and the other cities of Magna Graecia to face the Italic threat on their own. This stater may have been struck in the context of Metapontum's alliance with Alexander the Molossian and his wars against the Lucanians and Bruttians. The three-quarter facing depiction of the young Dionysus may be counted among the rarest depictions of the god in Greek numismatics. Unlike other Greek deities, particularly Apollo, Athena, and Arethusa, who are depicted facing from time to time on coins, the facing head format was not popular for representations of Dionysus, and on the rare occasions when he was depicted this way it was almost always the older, bearded form of the god that was used. The youthful aspect and relatively short, curly hair here gives the head the appearance of Apollo, and the type has often been misdescribed as such (e.g., HN Italy 1559; Gulbenkian 70). Only the ivy wreath makes it clear that the god in question is actually Dionysos. The artful and novel image of the wine-god is signed by the artist Kal.., who also engraved dies for other cities of Magna Graecia. The grain ear reverse was the civic badge of Metapontum, alluding to the city's rich agricultural territory and its involvement in the grain export trade. It had appeared as the emblem of the city on coins already in the sixth century B.C. The unusual width of the reverse flan allows the full reading of name of the magistrate name (ΦΙΛΟΞ).

Ex Morton & Eden 51, 2011, 11 and NAC 88, 2015, 357. Previously privately purchased from Spink & Son in 1973.

Poseidonia was located on a large, fertile plain along the Tyrrhenian coast at the mouth of the river Silaris. It was ideal for trade and agriculture, but was vulnerable to sea-borne attacks and raids from the inland hills. The archaeological record shows that Poseidonia had been populated by the 8th or 7th Century B.C., long before its 'foundation' by colonists from Sybaris, as related by Strabo.

Though Poseidonia may have played a role in the famed trade between the Etruscans and the Sybarites, commercial ties between Poseidonia and its mother city could not have been too strong since the early coins of Poseidonia were struck to the Campanian-Phocaean standard rather than the Italic-Achaean standard used at Sybaris. Their relationship must have been reasonably strong, though, for Poseidonia accepted Sybarites who in 510 sought refuge after their city was destroyed by Strabo.

Incuse coinage was struck in Poseidonia from about 530 to 500 B.C. showing a heraldic figure of the sea-god Poseidon striding forward with his trident raised as if ready to be thrown. Most scholars have, with good reason, assumed that this figure was inspired by a statue, for it has a monumental quality. The reverse, though less artistic than the obverse, is no less interesting in its composition: it is a complex image with the body and corded border set incuse, yet the chlamys, hair detail, trident, and inscription are all shown in relief.

The archaic qualities of this coin are a delight. The composition is stiff and formal, the hair is rendered as a series of pellets, the sculpted beard ends in a sharp point, the eye and the legs are shown in profile, yet the chest is presented frontally with the torso tapering toward the hips. Even the cord-and-pellet border is produced in a way to generate a sense of motion: one wonders if it was intended as a series of stylized waves or serpent-heads.

Though the principal design of Poseidon's striding figure remained unchanged through three decades of production, there is much variance of details from one die to the next. The trident can be plain, with barbs, and with ornamentation; the long strands of Poseidon's hair can be gathered at the back of his head or, as here, shown loose; and the chlamys can be depicted in many ways depending on the design of its fabric and how its ends are formed. Even a major detail, such as whether or not Poseidon wears a cap, can vary from die to die.

The design of the early nomoi of Caulonia has attracted various interpretations, many of which are documented in Barclay Head's Historia Numorum. Head saw the main figure as the mythical founder of Caulonia, who held a leaf from the plant καυλοσ as a punning allusion to the city name. Most scholars of the modern era seem to describe the figure as Apollo. The running figure in his hand – whose feet are winged on some examples – is thought by some to be a wind god, perhaps Zephyrus, but it is almost universally described as a genius or a daimon, a deity of a lower order which served the higher gods. Perhaps the most attractive explanation is that the figure, Apollo, is shown holding a laurel branch from the Vale of Tempe in Thessaly, and that the small figure is a daimon fulfilling the role of his messenger. If so, the type would reflect the story of how Apollo, after killing the serpent Pytho at Delphi with a well-aimed arrow, exiled himself for seven years of menial labour as penance for his murder; at the end of his period of atonement Apollo purified himself in the sacred grove of bay trees. Specifically the type would represent his return to Delphi, announced by the daimon-messenger, to assume his oracular duties on behalf of Zeus. It is disturbing that the stag seems to defy explanation – this despite it being an integral part of the design on the earliest coins of the city, and its subsequent adoption as the standard reverse type. The output of the mint at Caulonia was significant, especially considering that it was a city of comparatively little significance. It was the last of the Achaean colonies on the lonian coast to commence striking, and Robinson suggests that its disproportionately high output might be explained by the complete lack of early coinage by its wealthier and more important neighbour Locris.

In circa 710 B.C., Achaean Greeks from the northern Peloponnesos founded Kroton on the Bruttian peninsula of southern Italy at an injunction from the Delphic Oracle. Together with neighbouring Sybaris, Kroton grew to be the wealthiest and most important cities of Magna Graecia in the sixth century, in part thanks to its subsidiary colonies at Terina and Kaulonia. In circa 510 B.C., however, war broke out between Kroton and Sybaris, resulting in the total destruction of Sybaris. The Krotoniates reportedly went so far as to divert the course of the Crathis River in order to submerge the site of the enemy city. Thus Kroton was left as the single greatest Greek city in Bruttium. The city served as the capital of the Italiote League of Greek cities and was renowned for both its Olympic victors and for its physicians. After a devastating defeat by Locris and Rhegium at the Battle of the Sagra River (ca. 480 B.C.?), however, Kroton lost much of its former glory and began a slow decline. The treatment of Herakles on the obverse of this stater is comparable to the high Classical style of the Lapith and Centaur reliefs on the metopes of the Parthenon. The hero appears here in reference to the pre-foundation myth-history of the city. Diodorus Siculus (4.24.7) reports that during his wanderings in Italy, Herakles was welcomed and treated with hospitality by a man called Kroton. Unfortunately, as was often the case with friends and lovers of the great hero, Herakles accidentally killed this Kroton. In his remorse, Herakles buried Kroton with the honours of a hero and erected a monumental tomb for his worship. He further foretold that one day the site of his tomb would become the centre of a great and flourishing city that would be named after Kroton. The type illustrates Herakles taking a rest from his wanderings and labours, leaning on his club with his lion's skin and weapons set aside. He holds a filleted branch above a lighted altar in an attitude of sacrificial worship. Presumably the scene represents Herakles' institution of the hero cult of Kroton and the associated prophecy regarding the foundation of the city since an epichoric Doric Greek legend in the right field identifies him as oikistas ("founder"). The fish in the exergue serve to indicate the geographical location of the hero shrine of Kroton and the city on the bank of the Aesarus River. The reverse features the large tripod typical of Krotoniate coins going back to the city's incuse staters of the late sixth century BC. The tripod type refers to the crucial role of the Delphic oracle in establishing the colony of Kroton. On this coin, however, the die engraver has added a dramatic scene played out on either side of the tripod to emphasize the connection with Delphi. On the left, Apollo draws his bow to shoot a great, coiled serpent lurking to the right of the tripod. According to Greek mythical tradition, a terrible serpent named Pytho was sent by Hera to pursue Leto in a vain attempt to prevent her from giving birth to Apollo and Artemis. Apollo later avenged his mother by hunting down Pytho. The serpent took refuge in an oracular sanctuary of Gaia at Delphi, but Apollo followed it inside and killed it with his deadly arrows. In order to expiate the sacrilege of slaying a suppliant (even a monstrous one) in a temple, Apollo adopted the shrine for himself and instituted the quadrennial Pythian Games.

Akragas (Latin: Agrigentum) in southern Sicily was founded by Dorian Greek colonists from Gela in 582-580 B.C. The city rapidly grew in importance and wealth over the course of the sixth century B.C., eventually becoming a thorn in the side of the Punic settlements of western Sicily. In 480 B.C., the Akragantine tyrant, Theron, together with Dionysios I of Syracuse, defeated a major Punic invasion, but in the decades that followed, the relationship between Akragas and Syracuse soured. At last, in 461 B.C., open war broke out between the two and Akragas was defeated. Bitterness stemming from this defeat later prevented the Akragantines from sending aid to Syracuse when it was besieged by the Athenians in 414-413 B.C. When neighbouring Silenous was defeated by the Carthaginians in 410 B.C., Akragas did nothing. When Silenous was sacked the following year, Akragas again did nothing beyond accept refugees from the ruined city. The Carthaginians returned in 406 B.C. and besieged Akragas. The city held out for eight months before it fell. The inhabitants tried to flee to Gela and Leontini, but many were captured and put to the sword by the victorious Punic army. The Carthaginians remained at Akragas over the winter of 406/5 B.C. and then destroyed the city before returning home to Africa. This drachm was struck in the context of the fall of Silenous in 410-409 B.C., perhaps to fund the strengthening of Akragas' defences or to deal with expenses related to the Selinuntine refugees. The types are iconic for the city. The obverse depicting two eagles over the carcass of their prey is a brilliant study of nature executed with great artistic skill. One can almost hear the ululating cry of the eagle in the foreground as it throws its head back in triumph, while the eagle in the background is more practical, leaning forward and eager to relish its dinner. The reverse type is also remarkable in its own right. The crab and crayfish depicted there are executed in great detail, as if examples of these sea creatures were at hand while the dies were engraved. However, the crab has been embellished with a human face on its shell, apparently to represent an unknown marine deity.

Camarina was founded by colonists from Syracuse ca. 598 B.C., but its relationship with the mother city was very strained. Allied with Gela and native Sicel leaders, Kamarina began a disastrous war against Syracuse in the mid-sixth century B.C. and was destroyed. In 492 B.C., Syracuse was compelled to cede the territory of Kamarina to the Geloans, who rebuilt the city. Unfortunately, the restored Kamarina was attacked and destroyed again by Gelon I, the first tyrant of Syracuse, in 484 B.C. The ruins of Kamarina were abandoned until 461 B.C., when the Geloans again rebuilt it. Despite the history of enmity between Syracuse and Kamarina, the latter joined the alliance proffered by Syracuse at the Congress of Gela in 424 B.C. and remained neutral during the Athenian siege of Syracuse in 414-413 B.C. Following this conflict, Kamarina seems to have enjoyed relative peace until 405 B.C., when the city was sacked by the Carthaginians under Himilco and its population removed to the safety of Syracuse. Kamarina was a difficult city to keep standing. This didrachm was struck during the relatively quiet interlude for Kamarina between the Athenian expedition to Sicily and the removal of the population to Syracuse. The obverse type is a masterful depiction of the nymph Kamarina traversing the sea on the back of a swan — a bird that long served as an emblem of the city. Nike flies above a swan on silver litrae struck by Kamarina already in the mid-fifth century B.C. Here, however, the swan has been given the character of a small boat carried across the surface of the water by the wind caught in the sail created by the nymphs billowing sail. It is a brilliant treatment of the subject matter and illustrates the kind of dynamic artistic experimentation that was taking place on many dies cut for Sicilian coins in the second half of the fifth century B.C. The reverse type is a beautifully preserved depiction of the local river-god Hipparis. Even the delicate eyelashes and pupil of the eye are clear, testifying to the artistry of the engraver. The surrounding legend names the deity lest he be confused with the many other similar river-gods who made their appearances on Sicilian coins.

Founded by colonists from Rhodes and Crete in 689 B.C., Gela grew to become the most influential city of Greek Sicily in the early fifth century B.C. In 505 B.C., the oligarchic constitution of the city was subverted by a certain Kleander, who set himself up as the first tyrant of Gela. He was assassinated in 498 B.C. in the hope that a democratic constitution would be established, but instead, Kleander's son, Hippokrates, succeeded in the tyranny. Under Hippokrates, Gela expanded its territory and power, conquering neighboring cities like Kallipolis, Leontini, Naxos, and Zankle, and forcing Syracuse to cede the former territory of Kamarina. Much of this success was thanks to Gelon, Hippokrates' skilled cavalry commander. When Hippokrates was killed fighting against the native Sicels in 491 B.C., Gelon posed as the defender of his sons against a populace desirous of returning to constitutional government, but then used the support of the army to install himself as tyrant. He went on to capture Syracuse and establish his tyranny there, making the city his new capital in 485 B.C. These rare coins represent the very first tetradrachms struck by Gela, probably at the beginning of Gelon's tyranny. Unlike all subsequent tetradrachm issues of the city, the obverse does not feature a victorious charioteer, but rather an armed horseman on the charge. This militaristic type may perhaps reflect Gelon's origins as a cavalry commander. The later replacement of the horseman with a charioteer seems to be a conscious attempt to move away from an image underlining Gelon's use of force to seize power in favour of a popular type emphasizing aristocratic ideals and the intense spirit of competition that was always at work between cities and between tyrants in fifth-century Sicily. The reverse type depicts a playfully leaping man-faced bull who represents the local river Gelas. These early tetradrachms represent the first time that this important patron of the city was depicted on coins and one of the only times that he appears as a full figure. With the exception of these early coins and a tetradrachm issue struck ca. 415-405 B.C. (Jenkins, group IX, 485), only the forepart of Gelas is ever depicted on coins of Gela.

The 'Sosipolis' tetradrachms are perhaps the most famous coins of Gela. The identification of this nymph or goddess, who crowns a man-headed bull with a laurel wreath, is not certainly known, though we are fortunate to know that her name or title is Sosipolis ('savior of the city') since it is inscribed in the field. As Jenkins notes in his study of Geloan coinage, the inscription must refer to the woman as there are gold coins struck sometime later at Gela that show the head of the woman accompanied by the inscription Sosipolis. Attempts have been made to identify her with Greek deities, including Demeter and Tyche, with the latter being a good possibility, but she most likely is a water-nymph who in local lore was related to Gelas, the man-headed bull whom she crowns.

Despite the rising power of Syracuse as the fifth century progressed, Gela still retained much influence among the Greek cities of Sicily. In 415 B.C., a congress at Gela established an alliance that thwarted Athenian attempts to conquer the island and ultimately led to the destruction of the Athenians at the siege of Syracuse in 413 B.C. Thanks to Gela, the Greek cities of Sicily had weathered the storm and remained independent of the faltering Athenian Empire. Unfortunately, a new menace loomed on the horizon in the form of the Carthaginians. When a great Punic army marched against Akragas and destroyed it in 406 B.C., the Geloans gave refuge to the survivors. Knowing that their wealthy city would be the next target, the Geloans begged for assistance from Dionysios I, the ruling tyrant of Syracuse. The Carthaginians lay siege to Gela in 405 B.C. and probably would have taken the poorly fortified city immediately if not for the bravery of the defenders. The Geloans managed to hold out until Dionysios I arrived with an army, but when this was defeated they were forced to surrender the city to plunder and destruction by the Carthaginians, escaping with their families to Leontini. This gold litra was struck as an emergency issue in the dark days as the Punic noose began to tighten around Gela. The reverse depicts an obscure local goddess known as Sosipolis ("Savior of the City"), who has been variously treated in the scholarly literature as a local water nymph or a form of Tyche, Nike, and Demeter. She first appears on coins of Gela in the 440s B.C., crowning a man-faced bull representing the river-god Gelas. Here, however, there is no allusion to the victorious aspect of Sosipolis. Instead, one gets the distinct impression that the goddess is invoked on the coin out of dread and with the hope that she would live up to her name and save the city from the overwhelming forces of the Carthaginians. Alas, the prayers of the Geloans, even the ones made tangible in beautiful gold, ultimately fell on deaf ears and no salvation was forthcoming. It is unclear whether the Greek goddess lacked jurisdiction over non-Greek enemies, was too busy with other matters, or just wasn't in the mood to listen to the desperate Geloans. Whatever the case, Gela was doomed.

This exceptional tetradrachm, the first example of this Naxos issue with the Attic standard, is certainly due to the skill of an extraordinary die-engraver active in Sicily during the first half of the fifth century. This die, of extreme rarity, is characterised by remarkable expressive vigorousness. The obverse shows the bearded profile of Dionysus, facing to the right, with an ivy-wreath and hair tied up high in a knot at the nape of his neck. The ivy wreath, beard and knot break the dotted circle framing the head. The reverse shows the figure of Silenus, squatting naked, his bearded face (like that of Dionysus) turned to the left. The right leg is raised, the left tucked sideways under it, making space for a long, equine tail. The right hand holds up a cantharus (a form of cup especially sacred to Dionysus), with two handles and without a base, while the left hand supports the athletic, muscular body and lends the figure an intimate tension. The iconographic type shared by both sides of the coin, Dionysus' head and the kneeling Silenus, subsequently became widespread at Naxos until the issues (didrachms) of the last phase of the V century. The inspiration of the great Sicilian die-engraver was encouraged by the commemorative value attached to this coin, recalling as it does the return of the Nassians to their homeland following their exile to Leontini, after 461 B.C. We know from Diodorus Siculus, the great historian born in Agirium (one of the most ancient colonies at the heart of Sicily), that Hieron the Syracusan moved the inhabitants of Naxos and Catana to Leontini in 476 B.c.: "Hieron removed the people of Naxos and Catana from their cities and sent there settlers of his own choosing, having gathered five thousand from Peloponnesus and added an equal number of others from Syracuse; and the name of Catana he changed to Aetna, and not only the territory of Catana but also much of the neighbouring land which he added to it he portioned out in allotments, up to the sum of ten thousand settlers [...] And the Naxians and the Catanians whom he had removed from their native states he transferred to Leontini and commanded them to make their homes in that city along with the native population" (Biblioth. hist. XI 49 passim).

Created at the vanguard of an age when so many signed dies were used at Sicilian mints, this hemidrachm of Naxos stands out as a near-perfect example of numismatic art in Classical-period Sicily. The artist responsible for the obverse die, Procles, is presumed to have been a citizen of Naxos since most of his known dies occur there. However, he appears also to have performed work for the mint at Catana, some 25 miles to the south, where an identical signature appears on coins of this era. His work was highly skilled and technically precise, if a bit hesitant in what must have been a desire to achieve perfection. Thus, on this restrained work we see none of the miscalculations that sometimes plague the dies of some of Procles' more daring contemporaries.

The obverse portrays the youthful, horned head of Assinus, who personifies a river that originated in the hilly interior along the base of Mount Actna and drained into the sea just two or three miles from Naxos. The reverse, by virtue of its subject matter, preserves a link to a bygone era, for it revisits the squatting figure of Silenus originally conceived by the Aetna Master at least forty years prior. The arresting energy of that predecessor work is here abandoned, for Procles was a man of his age who had fully embraced the current mores of Greek art. In comparison with the Aetna Master's brooding, inebriated Silenus, the version of Prokles is decidedly modern and refined. The result is an image that derives its potency from its remarkably soft contours, which give the impression of a less intimidating, more indulgent god of the vine.

Sicilian coinage first began in the final decades of the sixth century, probably around 530/25 B.C. It made its first appearance at four mints: the Chalcidian colonies of Zancle (later named Messana), Himera, and Naxos, and also at the city of Selinus, a colony of Megara Hyblaea. Despite the common Chalcidian heritage of three of these cities, the coinage of each was strikingly different from the others the standards in use at Zancle, Himera, and Naxos were based on a third of the Chalcidian stater, while the Selinunte didrachm was of Attic-Euboic weight; the reverses of both Himera and Selinus employed incuse squares divided into alternately raised and sunken triangles, while Zancle used a schematised pattern with a cockle shell in the centre and Naxos used a two-type design. Thus when Syracuse followed its Sicilian neighbours and began striking its own coinage c. 510 B.C., it is not surprising that they chose to follow no one, decidedly taking their own unique path.

The first coins minted at Syracuse were tetradrachms, struck on the Attic standard of approximately 17.20 g. The obverse type was of purely Syracusan origin, and depicted a male charioteer driving a quadriga with the city ethnic above. The style is severe with sharp relief planes and recall the style from certain early Macedonian mints (indeed, as a rule, hoards of Sicilian coins are not found outside Sicily, yet hoards containing coins from Acanthus in Macedon have been found at Syracuse). This was the period before the tyrants, a time when Syracuse was ruled by an oligarchy of wealthy citizens. These ruling aristocrats would have enjoyed equestrian pursuits, especially the great chariot contests at Delphi and Olympia, and it is therefore thought that the chariot design reflects these interests. The reverse of the very first tetradrachm issue is a simple four-part incuse square design, the sections divided by thin crossing lines, and was copied from the same Acanthian (and perhaps other Macedonian) tetradrachms that served as inspiration for the obverse. Soon after this very rare first issue, the reverse was modified to include a small central medallion containing the head of Arethusa, a local fountain goddess, facing to the left, her strong and logical archaic features of characteristically Dorian style. The superimposition of a medallion on the reverse had already occurred at Athens, the coins of which apparently served as inspiration for this design element appearing at Syracuse.

Throughout the fifth century, Syracuse continued to prosper and the city soon came to predominate over the regional affairs of Sicily. The unique chariot type and the tetradrachm denomination of Attic standard first adopted at Syracuse would, in time, become the principal type and denomination throughout the whole of the island, and was even widely copied by the Carthaginians at their Punic mints during the fourth century B.C.

In recent decades the dates of numerous ancient coins, including the celebrated works attributed to the Demareteion Master, have been reconsidered. These coins had traditionally been placed in 480 or 479 B.C. based upon an historical association derived from a passage in the eleventh book of Diodorus Siculus. However, the numismatic component of his account, which was composed 450 years after the events described, appears flawed, and current thought places these coins firmly between circa 470 and 460 B.C.

Diodorus records the generous terms for peace given by the Syracusan tyrant Gelon to the Carthaginians, who in 480 B.C. the Greeks had just defeated at the Battle of Himera. He reports that the Carthaginians were asked to pay only the costs of war incurred by the Greeks, two thousand talents of silver, and to build two temples in which copies of the treaty were to be preserved.

That report is followed by the passage relevant to the Demareteion decadrachm: "The Carthaginians, having unexpectedly gained their deliverance, not only agreed to all this but also promised to give in addition a gold crown to Demarete, the wife of Gelon. For Demarete at their request had contributed the greatest aid toward the conclusion of the peace, and when she had received the crown of one hundred gold talents from them, she struck a coin which was called from her a Demareteion. This was worth ten Attic drachmas and was called by the Sicilian Greeks, according to its weight, a pentekontalitron [a fifty-litra piece]." (XI 26.3)

In his 1969 work The Demareteion and Sicilian Chronology, Kraay challenged the notion current since 1830 that the decadrachm mentioned by Diodorus was the first issue of silver decadrachms at Syracuse. Beyond the fact that the passage suggests the coins would have been made of gold, Kraay objected on numismatic grounds to so early a date for the first decadrachm. He noted how its incorrect date of c.480/79 B.C. had become "the sheet-anchor of Sicilian numismatic chronology" and, consequently, had skewed ideas on the chronologies of so many other coinages.

Moreover, Kraay notes that the appearance of the leaping lion on two issues of Leontini tetradrachms had led some to assume that the tyrant of Leontini must have played a role at the Battle of Himera. However, literary sources record no such involvement, and if this coinage was disassociated with the victory at Himera, the only connection needed between the Demareteion issues of Syracuse and Leontini would be of a numismatic character.

It is now believed that the earliest possible date for the Demarcteion decadrachm is c.470 B.C., and that it more likely was struck in about 465 B.C. The same may be said for the associated tetradrachms of Syracuse that Kraay notes exhibit "the same peculiarities of style and design" as the decadrachm. Kraay initially had narrowed the timeframe for the decadrachm to c.466-461 B.C., between the expulsion of the tyrant Hieron I from Syracuse and the removal of foreign mercenaries from the city in 461; but a few years later had settled upon c.465 B.C.

Horses had been shown in high action on Sicilian coins since early in the 5th Century B.C., notably at Gela and Leontini, but the first time it occurred at Syracuse was in about 430 B.C., when an isolated group of coins were produced from four obverse dies (Boeh. V295-298). Even if they were not artistically inspired, these unsigned dies were a ground-breaking effort. Tetradrachms with horses in nearly identical postures were also struck at Katane, and it is not certain which mint was the innovator, and which the copyist. About fifteen years passed before another effort was made at Syracuse to show horses in action; from that point onward, however, Syracusan artists abandoned the tradition of showing horses moving at a modest pace and in orderly profile.

The occasion for this change seems to have been the conflict with Athens that raged on land and offshore from 415 to 413 B.C. The creativity of Syracusan die engravers was suddenly unleashed, ushering in the mint's most celebrated period, c. 415 to c. 385 B.C. Often accompanying these explosive designs were signatures of the artists who had engraved the dies. This particular coin, struck about a decade into this period of great creativity, bears the abbreviated signatures of 'Euth' (Euthydamos?) on its obverse and Eumenes on its reverse. The chariot scene has changed from earlier versions in several ways. With a few exceptions Nike had traditionally crowned the horses, but in this period the charioteer tends to receive Nike's wreath. Also, the chariot is not shown in allowing the artist to foreshorten certain elements (notably the wheels) and to show the contours of the horses, driver and chariot, especially when - as here - they are shown struggling into a turn. The charioteer on this die - the only one signed by 'Euth' - is winged, which has invited various identifications, including Agon or Eros. The composition clearly inspired the last obverse die used to strike tetradrachms at Selinus on the eve of its destruction by Carthage in 409 B.C. It is always possible, of course, that 'Euth' himself cut the die for Selinus, which, like Syracuse, had opposed the intervention of Athens. There also is a maritime element to the obverse die: in the exergue there is a powerful rendition of Scylla capturing a fish, which might allude to the Syracusan defeat of the Athenian fleet in 412 in the Straits of Messina, the realm of Scylla. Another clue, perhaps, was suggested by Jenkins, who describes this Nike as holding in her left hand an aphalston or a palm branch, either of which could allude to a naval victory - perhaps, again, the victory of Syracuse over the Athenian fleet. The reverse of Eumenos also departs from earlier versions. Not only is the style markedly different, but the goddess is no longer the Artemis-Arethusa of old, instead she is wreathed in barley ears and poppy heads, and thus is probably Persephone or Demeter.

This tetradrachm belongs to the most celebrated period of Syracusan numismatic art — the period of the signing artists (ca. 413-400 B.C.). During this period, a large new series of tetradrachms was struck from silver captured from the Athenians following their unsuccessful siege of Syracuse and especially from ransom payments made to repatriate about 2,300 Athenian hoplites who had survived the debacle. These had been captured by the Syracusans and imprisoned under awful circumstances in the city's stone quarry. All of this Athenian money was melted down and re-struck as a new, celebratory tetradrachm series featuring a racing quadriga on the obverse and the head of Arethusa, the patron nymph of Syracuse, on the reverse. Some of the best artists in Sicily produced dies for this new coinage. Filled with pride in their work, which often pushed the boundaries of Classical Greek numismatic representations and involved artistic experimentation, many of the artists signed their dies. This particular coin is a rarity for the period in that the Arethusa die is not signed with the artist's name, but instead features the small head of a satyr beneath the neck truncation. This may have been the personal emblem of the artist or perhaps a pun on his name. The obverse type is the usual racing chariot that was a traditional type for Syracusan coinage going back to the second quarter of the fifth century B.C., but now it is infused with a dynamism not seen before. Whereas the horses of earlier chariots were arranged one on top of each other in cookie-cutter fashion, here each horse is an individual, each with its own distinct leg and head positions. The potential monotony of four horse heads in a row is skillfully alleviated by turning back the head of the third horse from the right. The turning head is also associated with a broken rein that trails below. That horse is going to be a serious problem for the charioteer, who is already driving at breakneck speed. Through these small but important details, the die engraver draws us into the exciting story of the race, although the Nike flying above assures us that whatever dangers are posed by the third horse the charioteer will still manage to finish as the victor.

It was claimed that Hieron II, the future tyrant of Syracuse (ca. 275-269/265 B.C.) and king of Sicily (269/265-215 B.C.) was exposed as an infant, but a swarm of bees miraculously kept him alive by feeding him honey until he was rescued. As an adult, he became a general in the Syracusan army and used the forces at his command to take control of the government at Syracuse and become tyrant. Despite the negative connotations of tyranny, Hieron II is said to have been a good ruler and an able administrator. He spent much of the 260s B.C. waging war against the Mamertines, a large band of Campanian mercenaries who terrorized the cities of eastern Sicily from a base at Messana. By 264 B.C., Hieron II had Messana under siege, but was prevented from capturing the city and completely eradicating the Mamertines by the arrival of a Carthaginian garrison. When he returned to Syracuse he was acclaimed king in recognition of his successes in freeing Sicily from the Campanian scourge. However, things began to get out of hand when he resumed the offensive against Messana the following year. By this time, the Mamertines had entered into an alliance with the Romans and ejected the Carthaginians with the help of the consul Appius Claudius Caudex, Hieron II again besieged Messana, this time with the help of the Carthaginians. Their failure to desist when Caudex ordered them to stop ignited the First Punic War (264-241 B.C.). Hieron II was forced to withdraw to Syracuse and face a Roman siege in 263 B.C. Realizing that the odds were against him, the king quickly came to terms with the Romans, thereby preserving much of his Sicilian kingdom in exchange for accepting the status of a subordinate Roman ally and the payment of an indemnity of 100 talents. However, his absolute loyalty as the First Punic War progressed earned him great respect at Rome. In gratitude, the Romans revisited the peace treaty with Syracuse in 248 B.C., cancelling the outstanding indemnity payments and according Hieron II the status of an equal ally. Following the elevation of his position vis-à-vis the Romans, the king of Syracuse worked hard to present himself to the rest of the Greek world as a Hellenistic king, comparable in grandeur to the rulers of the great dynasties of the Antigonids, Seleukids, and Ptolemies. He beautified Syracuse with new building programs, contributed large gifts of money and grain to Rhodes after the devastating earthquake of 227 BC. He also instituted new tax laws that were considered so equitable that they were ultimately adopted by the Romans as the basis for tribute payments from subject cities of Sicily. Hieron II remained a staunch ally of Rome at the outbreak of the Second Punic War (218-201 B.C.), warning the Roman administration in Sicily of impending Carthaginian attacks and sending support to Rome in the aftermath of the disastrous battles of Lake Trasimene (217 B.C.) and Cannae (216 B.C.). The aged and respected king died in 215 B.C., leaving his kingdom to his grandson, Hieronymos, who was not nearly as wise as his grandfather. This extremely rare 32-litra multiple was certainly struck after 265 B.C., when Hieron II assumed the royal title, and possibly as late as the period 225-215 B.C. if his system of litra multiples was intended to be exchangeable with the Roman quadrigatus didrachm, as is sometimes suggested. The obverse portrait type depicts Hieron II as a Hellenistic king in the manner of the contemporary monarchs of Macedon, Egypt, and Syria. He wears a diadem — the universal symbol of Hellenistic kingship — and has a slightly elevated gaze, both of which are common features of other royal portraits of the period. The reverse type, however, looks to the old civic coinage of Syracuse, which had featured quadrigae and Nike (usually flying above) since the early fifth century B.C. The novelty here is that on Hieron's 32-litra piece, Nike actually drives the chariot herself. If there was an intended relationship between the litra multiples and the quadrigatus then it may be that Nike driving the chariot is derived from the quadrigatus reverse type, which depicts Victory driving a chariot for Jupiter.

Pherai was one of the oldest cities of Thessaly situated in the region of Pelasgiotis. It's fame stretched back to the age of myth, when Herakles aided Admetos, the king of Pherai in rescuing his wife Alcestis from Hades. In a selfless act of love, Alcestis had volunteered to take the place of Admetos in death in order that her husband might live forever. Herakles, seeing what a grievous blow the loss of his wife was to Admetos and desirous of repaying the past hospitality of the king of Pherai undertook the dangerous journey to return Alcestis from the Underworld. In the fifth century B.C. Pherai was often allied with Athens, but as the Peloponnesian War (441-404 B.C.) drew to a close the government of the city was seized by a certain Lykophron, who established himself as tyrant (ca. 406-390 B.C.) and embarked on a series of struggles with Larissa for dominance in Thessaly. His successor, Jason of Pherai (390-370 B.C.), was powerful enough to influence the peace settlement between Thebes and Sparta following the Battle of Leuktra (371 B.C.) and his mercenary army was poised to exert Thessalian hegemony over all of mainland Greece when Jason was assassinated. The tyrants of who followed lacked the gifts and vision of Jason, and Pherai, with the rest of Thessaly, ultimately fell under the domination of Philip II of Macedon. Although this stater was struck after the end of the great tyrants of Pherai and Thessalian independence, its types represent traditional deities of the city. The obverse depicts the local Pheraian fountain nymph, Hyperaia, clearly identified by the lion's head spout pouring water behind her head. Also local in flavor is the reverse type, which features Ennodia, a specifically Pheraian deity. Ennodia, whose name literally means "by the roadside" was a terrifying goddess of the roadside and the dead, whose power was regularly invoked by witches and necromancers. The cult of Ennodia spread throughout Thessaly under Jason of Pherai until she was recognized as a national Thessalian deity as much as a local Pheraian one.

This attractive gold stater of the Aetolian League was struck to finance the long struggle between the federal state and Philip V of Macedon expressed through the violence of the Social War (220-217 B.C.) and the First Macedonian War (215-205 B.C.). These wars were very expensive for the Aetolian League, especially considering that it was forced to accept humiliating peace treaties at the end of each, and gold was required to maintain the federal and mercenary forces that it fielded against Philip. The coin types are particularly interesting as they simultaneously look to the past and presage the future. The Athena obverse type is drawn directly from the staters of Alexander the Great, which had become internationally recognized and almost universally accepted throughout the Mediterranean world in the third century B.C. The reverse type depicts the personification of Aetolia seated on a pile of Gallic shields and holding Nike, advertising the past glory of the League. This type represents a statute erected by the Aetolian League at Delphi following its famous repulse of Gallic invaders in 279/8 B.C. The victory not only saved the great panhellenic shrine from plunder by the barbarian, but also prevented the Celts from making inroads further south into mainland Greece. As such, the League was catapulted to stardom as the savior of Greece. Building on this fame, the Aetolian League expanded beyond the borders of Aetolia proper. By the late third century B.C. the League had become a Greek superpower capable of opposing Macedonian kings and was poised to absorb the entirety of mainland Greece within its borders. The depiction of Aetolia as a bare-breasted Amazonian warrior seated on a pile of shields influenced the development of representations of Roma. The League was allied against Philip V during the First Macedonian War and the subsequent Second Macedonian War (200-197 B.C.) and Roman forces operating in Greece almost certainly would have been exposed to Aetolian coinage. The Aetolia type of this stater seems to have appealed to Roman tastes and spawned very similar depictions of Roma on Republican denarii of the second and first centuries B.C. (e.g., Crawford 287/1, 335/1, 421/1). This is a grand irony because the Aetolian League became disenchanted with its Roman allies and took up arms against them in 191-189 B.C. This disastrous Aetolian War resulted in Roman victory and the dissolution of the League outside of Aetolia.

Although it had been inhabited since the Neolithic period, in the Bronze Age Knossos grew into a major city centred on a palace complex that may have been home to as many as 100,000 people. Knossos served as a political and cultural capital for Minoan civilization — the distinctive culture of Bronze Age Crete named after the mythological King Minos of Knossos. The impressive remains of the Minoan palace complex of Knossos was excavated by Sir Arthur Evans beginning in 1901 and resulted in the discovery of two previously unknown early Greek scripts, Linear A and Linear B. The invasions and natural disasters that brought about the collapse of many Bronze Age states around 1200-1100 B.C. also ended Minoan civilization. Nevertheless, while the age of the palace was gone, Knossos survived to become one of the most important cities of Crete in the Iron Age. In the Classical and Hellenistic periods, Knossos was frequently at war with neighbouring Cretan cities, especially Lyttos and Polymbenia. This coin may have been produced in the context of these inter-city struggles. The glory days of Minoan civilization were far in the past when this drachm was struck, nevertheless, the reverse type harks back to the time when King Minos ruled from Knossos and the Greeks of both the surrounding islands and even the mainland paid him tribute. Here we see an aerial view of the famous Labyrinth. Minos ordered this maze-like prison constructed to contain the monstrous Minotaur, a cannibalistic half-man, half-bull creature born from the unnatural love of Minos' queen, Pasiphae, and the Cretan Bull. Minos demanded youths and maidens to be sent to Knossos as tribute by subject cities. These were sent into the Labyrinth and soon became hopelessly lost in its winding passages before they were devoured by the Minotaur. This horrific custom only came to an end when the hero Theseus had himself included among the human tribute from Athens. With the help of Minos' daughter, Ariadne, Theseus killed the monster and found his way out of the Labyrinth thanks to a ball of string he had unwound as he advanced.

Ex Leu sale 48, 1989, 209. From the von Aulock and Harald Salvesen collections.

The reverse of this tetradrachm, which may perhaps predate Mithradates IV's marriage to his sister, Laodike, depicts the hero Perseus. According to Greek myth, Akrisios of Argos cast the infant Perseus and his mother Danae into the sea in a wooden box to escape an oracle that he would be killed by a son of Danae. When Perseus grew to manhood, he was sent by Polydektes of Seriphos to bring back the head of Medusa with the expectation that he would die in the attempt. Medusa had been a mortal woman, but a curse by Athena caused her hair to transform into a mass of writhing serpents and her appearance became so hideous that she turned all who looked upon her to stone. With the assistance of Athena, Perseus obtained from the Hesperides a magic sack, a helmet that rendered him invisible, and an adamantine sword (the harpa). Hermes also loaned him his winged sandals while Athena gave him a polished shield. By looking at Medusa only indirectly through her reflection in his shield, Perseus managed to behead the monster without being turned to stone. Then, after carefully packing the deadly head in his sack, Perseus made his way back to Seriphos. On the return journey, Perseus passed through Aethiopia, where he saved the princess Andromeda from being devoured by a sea monster (ketos) and took her as his wife. Once back in Scriphos, Perseus learned that Polydektes had attempted to rape his mother while he was gone. In repayment for this terrible insult, Perseus did not hand over the head of Medusa, safely in the sack, but pulled it out for Polydektes to see with is own eyes. In that instant the king of Scriphos was turned to stone. The hero then went on to become king of Argos after accidentally killing Akrisios. Perseus appears here, not so much because Mithradates IV wanted to recall the myth of the hero, but because of an old Greek folk etymology that made Perseus an ancestor of the Persians. The Persian Great King Xerxes I (486-465 B.C.) was already aware of this etymology at the time of his invasion of mainland Greece (480 B.C.) and tried to use it to convince the Argives to capitulate. The link between Perseus and the Persians was deeply entrenched by second century B.C. and Mithradates IV, who was himself of Iranian descent, used it to associate the Mithradatic dynasty of Pontus with the greatness of the Achaemenid Persian Empire. The irony of using a Greek hero to advertise a connection to an Iranian empire that was frequently in conflict with the states of Greece is palpable. This irony is further compounded by the otherwise conscious Hellenizing of the obverse type and legend: Mithradates IV wears the diadem of a Hellenistic king rather than the tiara of an Iranian ruler, and the reverse legend is entirely Greek in its use of titles like Philopator ("Father-loving") and Philadelphos ("Brother-loving"). The combination of types and inscriptions on this tetradrachm is wonderfully schizophrenic in the desire to simultaneously tout Mithradates IV as an Iranian scion of the Persian Empire and as a Hellenistic king in emulation of Alexander the Great, the destroyer of that same empire.

Ex NAC sale 2, 1990, 173. From the Jameson and Harald Salvesen collections.

Mithradates IV Philopator succeeded his brother, Pharnakes I, as king of Pontus and took great pains to undo the damage to the Pontic kingdom caused by Pharnakes's conflicts with the neighbouring Bithynian and Attalid kingdoms. He supported Attalos II against Prousias II of Bithynia in 154 B.C., which also made him a friend of Rome. The friendly relationship that he established between Pontus and the Romans remained firm until it was shattered irreparably by Mithradates VI Eupator and the Asiatic Vespers of 89/8 B.C.

Although little else is known about the reign of Mithradates IV, his coins reveal much about the king's desire to present himself as a Hellenistic Greek monarch equal to the Antigonid, Seleucid, and Ptolemaic kings who could trace their bloodlines back to the famous generals of Alexander the Great. Despite his Iranian ancestry and possession of a backwater kingdom on the Black Sea, this tetradrachm firmly places him in the tradition of Hellenistic royal superpowers. The portrait of Mithradates IV appears wearing the diadem, the universal symbol of Hellenistic kingship, and jugate with the head of his wife, Laodice, who also happened to be his sister. The royal jugate portrait was first pioneered by Ptolemy II Philadelphos for gold coins celebrating the deification of his father and mother as well as of himself and his own sister-wife, Arsinoe II.

While marriage between brother and sister had a long tradition among the pharaohs and therefore Ptolemy II and Arsinoe II could be seen as continuing the native Egyptian custom, it was not acceptable in mainstream Greek culture. In an attempt to make his brother-sister marriage more palatable to Greeks, the apologists of Ptolemy II appealed to his divinity, pointing out that Zeus and Hera were also brother and sister. The reverse type of Mithradates IV's tetradrachm also seems to make the same argument, depicting the full-length figures of Zeus and Hera as a parallel for the portraits of the king and Laodice on the obverse. The type was presumably aimed at a Greek audience (outside of Pontus?) since brother-sister marriages were not unknown among ancient Iranian elites and would not have required any special explanation — and certainly not one appealing to Greek gods — to the native Iranian population of Pontus.

In addition to the aspiration to royal greatness in the footsteps of the Ptolemaic kings expressed by this coin, the treatment of the portraits is remarkable. Unlike the frequent tendency towards idealization in Hellenistic royal coin portraits, the portraits of Mithradates VI and Laodixe approach a veristic style that seems to underline the non-Greek ethnicity of the Pontic king and queen. The un-Greek character of the royal portraits are at odds with the other features of the coin that virtually scream Greek royal culture following the Ptolemaic model. As such, this coin brilliantly encapsulates the spirit of the Hellenistic Age, in which many non-Greeks sought to elevate themselves through the adoption of Greek cultural elements.

The city of Amathos on Cyprus is counted among the oldest royal centres on the island, with a history of settlement extending back as far as ca. 1100 B.C. It was founded by an indigenous Cypriot people described as "Pelasgians" in the Greek sources, but came to host important communities of Greek and Phoenician traders interested in the nearby copper mines. Politically, Amathos seems to have been aligned more closely with the Semitic cities of the Phoenician coast than with the Greek cities of Cyprus and openly opposed a revolt against Persian authority organized by Onesilos, the Greek king of Salamis, in 499-494 B.C. Onesilos, leading Salamis and the other Greek cities against Amathos, besieged but failed to capture the city. The Amathousians avenged themselves by capturing and beheading Onesilos. According to Herodotos, the head of the Salaminian king was hung up before the gates of Amathos as a warning to potential enemies, but eventually the grisly trophy became the home for a swarm of bees that filled the dead king's skull with honeycomb. Alarmed at this portent, the Amathousians consulted an oracle that advised them to appeare the shade of the king by burying the head and offering him sacrifice as a hero. The city was famous for its temple dedicated to a local goddess, whom the Greeks considered a form of Aphrodite. This Aphrodite Amathousia was distinguished from other forms of the goddess by her association with an Aphrodite figure with male genitalia, whom the Greeks called Aphroditos and worshipped in rites that involved the exchange of clothing between men and women. The mix of cultural influences that can be seen in the history and archaeology of Amathos are also visible in the coinage of the city. At the same time that the beautiful archaic lions on this stater are very Greek in their execution and style, the emphasis on the animal's ribs, the extension of the mane onto the belly, and the treatment of the muzzle seem to derive from Persian and Phoenician artistic influence (cf. the lion on the stater of Baalmelek I of Citium in this sale). To this combination of stylistic influences should be added the inscription, which give the initials of the city not in Greek or Phoenician script, but in Cypriot syllabic script - a native writing system derived from the Linear A script of the Minoan Bronze Age. Thus the cultural history of ancient Amathos is summarised in a single coin.

Although the site of Citium had been inhabited since the Bronze Age, by the tenth century B.C. it seems to have been colonised by Greeks and Phoenician traders who sought to exploit the copper mines of the island. Judging from the city's participation in Onesilos of Salamis' revolt against Persian authority in 499-494 B.C, it has been suggested that the city was ruled by Greek kings at the time. However, once the revolt was quashed and Onesilos killed, the Persians sought to increase their influence on the island by supporting friendly Phoenician dynasts. The earliest of these kings known by name at Citium was Baalmelek I, the issuer of this stater. Unfortunately, we know little about his reign beyond that he fathered Azbaal, the future king of both Citium and Idalion (ca. 449-425 B.C.), and struck silver coins. The types of the stater, however, do give some insight into Baalmelek I's background. While the obverse is very Greek in its depiction of an Archaic-style Herakles wielding his club and bow, Herakles here should be understood as the interpretatio gracea of the Phoenician god Ba'al Melqart ("Lord of the City"), the patron deity of Tyre. Herodotos reports that Herakles was long associated with Melqart at Tyre and the image of the Greek hero standing in for the Phoenician god frequently occurs on coins struck by Tyre in the Hellenistic and Roman periods. The prominence of Herakles on Baalmelek I's stater strongly suggests that the king and his Phoenician dynasty had Tyrian origins. The lion of the reverse is an animal closely linked to Herakles through the hero's famous exploits in Nemea, but here probably serves as a generic symbol of royal power. This probability is reinforced by the presence of an extremely well preserved Phoenician inscription identifying the stater as a [coin] of Baalmelek." Depictions of lions and lion hunts are a commonplace of ancient Near Eastern royal art. Indeed, the face and mane of the lion on the stater bear comparison to the lions depicted in the reliefs of Achaemenid Persepolis.

Greek tradition held that the city of Lapethos was founded by Lakonians under the leadership of a certain Praxander, but it actually seems to have been a Phoenician settlement since the eleventh century B.C. The history of the city and its kings in the Classical period is poorly known, but local coinage, which begins the name of King Sidqmelek in ca. 450-435 B.C., provides some names. Demonikos was long believed to have been a Greek king imposed on Phoenician-dominated Citium by Evagoras I of Salamis and the Athenian general, Chabrias, in 388/7 B.C., but recent scholarship now makes him a member of the dynasty of Lapethos. Demonikos has the notable distinction of being the first foreign ruler to whom the Athenian rhetorician Isokrates addressed an oration. In this oration Isokrates advises the young king on the importance of education in becoming a just and good ruler. The types and inscription of this stater give some insight into the reign of Demonikos at Lapethos. The standing figure of Athena seems to advertise his legitimacy in the royal dynasty of the city. The head of the goddess occurs on coins of Lapethos already around 480 B.C. At the same time this type, combined with the king's Greek name, seems to indicate that his regime was propped up by Chabrias and the Athenians. It has been pointed out that the figure of Athena replicates the Pheidian cult statue of Athena in the Parthenon. The Herakles reverse, however, alludes to the Phoenician, and specifically Tyrian, origin of the dynasty of Lapethos. As at Citium, the Herakles type is intended to represent the Tyrian god, Melqart. The Phoenician background of the city and its kings is further underlined by the use of a Phoenician inscription despite the very Greek quality of Demonikos' name.

The site of Marion on northern Cyprus had been inhabited since the Neolithic Period, but grew into an important city-kingdom in the late Bronze Age. The city and its kings grew wealthy from the gold and copper mines that they controlled and through maritime trade in metal and timber. The details of the history of Marion in the Classical period is poorly known, beyond that it was freed from Persian influence by the Athenian general, Kimon, following the decisive battle of Salamis (480 B.C.). Stasoikos I was one of the Greek kings of Marion who rose to power in the second half of the fifth century B.C. Little is known about his reign beyond that he issued silver coins inscribed in the native Cypriot syllabic script. The types of this stater depict the head of Apollo on the obverse and a goddess riding a bull on the reverse. In almost any other context the reverse type would be described as Europa riding on the back of Zeus in the form of a bull, but at Marion the rider is often thought to represent a Cypriot Aphrodite. The type might also indicate a degree of Phoenician cultural influence at Marion and in the dynasty of Stasoikos I, for Europa was generally equated with the Phoenician goddess Astarte at Sidon. Cypriot syllabic script was a writing system derived from Minoan Linear A that survived on Cyprus until the Hellenistic period. The script was essentially a throwback to the Bronze Age that managed to survive for centuries despite competition from both Greek and Phoenician alphabetic scripts on the island in the Classical period. This stater features the same long syllabic legend on both obverse and reverse naming "King Stasoikos."

According to Greek mythological tradition, when famine struck Cilicia, a son of a Phoenician woman named Paphos and a Syrian called Sandokos, sailed to Cyprus in search of more fertile lands. Upon his arrival in southwestern Cyprus, Kinyras founded the city of Paphos in honour of his mother, and established a temple dedicated to Aphrodite, the goddess who guided him on his journey. Aphrodite was herself closely associated with the site of Paphos. It was believed that when she was born from the sea foam, Aphrodite came ashore on Cyprus at a promontory near Paphos. The city's temple of Aphrodite — actually Phoenician Astarte, whom the Greeks considered a form of their own goddess of love — was already famous in the time of Homer and had a reputation for its oracle. Its priests, known as the Kinyradai, claimed descent from Kinyras and wielded the power of kings in the city. Siromos(?), the Paphian ruler named on this stater, is thought to have been a Kinyrad king of the late fifth century B.C., but almost nothing is known about his reign. The coin types allude to both geographical features of his kingdom and the cult of Aphrodite at Paphos. The obverse type depicts a man-faced bull — the usual Greek means of representing a river-god — that almost certainly represents the River Bokaros. The mouth of this small river formed the harbour of Paphos. The reverse type represents an astragalos (knucklebone). Astragaloi were thrown in a manner similar to dice and were frequently used in ritual fashion to divine the will of the gods. Here the astragalos is thought to indicate the method by which the oracle of Aphrodite determined answers to the questions asked of it.

Salamis on Cyprus was reputedly founded by the Achaean hero, Teucer, who was unable to return home after the Trojan War because of his failure to avenge his brother Ajax. The historical city had been inhabited by a population reflecting Greek and Phoenician cultural influences since the eleventh century B.C., but by the sixth century B.C. the Greek element had become dominant. In the Classical period, the city was frequently in alliance with Athens in order to oppose the Persians and to expand Salaminian influence over the other cities of Cyprus. Nikodamas, the issuer of this stater, was a Greek king of Salamis in the decade before the expedition of an Athenian fleet under the general Kimon against the Persians on Cyprus in 450 B.C. Simultaneous battles fought on land and on the sea before the walls of Salamis resulted in victory for the Greeks. Unfortunately, what rôle Nikodamas may have played in these events, if any, are unknown. This unique and artistically attractive stater ultimately derives its recumbent ram from the coinage of Evelthon, the first king of Salamis to strike coins in the sixth century B.C. This reuse of this old type served to advertise Nikodamas as a legitimate king from the dynasty of Evelthon (other rare issues also include the name of Evelthon in the obverse legend) and followed the royal numismatic custom at Salamis. Nikodamas' recognised predecessors, as well as Evanthes, who has been variously considered a successor or predecessor of Nikodamas, all employed this dynastic ram obverse type. The ram's head of the reverse may have been a novelty introduced by Nikodamas, if he did not inherit this reverse type from Evanthes, who also used it. The detailed execution of the head invites comparison with the best of the ram's head rhyta (drinking horns) that were fashionable at Greek drinking parties at the time that Nikodamas and Evanthes produced their coinages.

In 351 B.C., Evagoras II, the Greek king of Salamis was overthrown and sent into exile after he refused to support a Cypriot rebellion against the Persians. He was succeeded on the throne by his nephew, Pnytagoras, whose political views were better aligned with those of the city's Greek population. Evagoras II obtained the promise of the Great King Artaxerxes II that if he could recapture Salamis for the Persian Empire he would be restored as king. With military assistance from the Athenian general, Phokion, Evagoras II besieged Pnytagoras in Salamis and took the city. However, during the campaign, Artaxerxes II began to hear unspecified and unpleasant rumors about Evagoras II. The rumors were of such great concern that the Great King decided to renege on his promise and instead confirmed Pnytagoras as king of Salamis. Pnytagoras still reigned in the city when Alexander the Great defeated the Persians at the Battle of Issos (333 B.C.). In the following year, he joined the Macedonian conqueror as an ally, supplying elements of his fleet to assist in Alexander's difficult siege of Tyre. Alexander later rewarded him by detaching the city of Tamassos from the territory of Kition and adding it to the kingdom of Salamis. Pnytagoras died later in 332 B.C., leaving the kingdom to his son, Nikokreon. This gold stater depicts two different aspects of Aphrodite, the divine patron of Cyprus. On the obverse she wears a turreted crown to assimilate her to the city-goddess, Tyche, and to identify her as the protectress of Salamis. On the reverse she appears as an oriental goddess with long hair in tight ringlets and wearing a hoop earring. The same types were reused for the staters of Nikokreon.

The tortoise on this stater may perhaps take some inspiration from the popular early trade coinage of Aegina, although the animal on staters of Aegina was a sea tortoise before 456/445 B.C. and this uncertain Cypriot stater seems to have been struck ca. 480 B.C. More probably, the land tortoise here is a reference to Aphrodite, the primary deity associated with the island of Cyprus. The tortoise was regularly associated with Aphrodite Ourania ("Heavenly Aphrodite"), a title often given to Near Eastern goddesses equated by the Greeks with Aphrodite. A famous cult statue of Aphrodite Ourania created by Pheidias for the temple of the goddess at Elis depicted Aphrodite standing with one foot on a tortoise. The goat reverse is unparalleled on Cypriot coins, although recumbent goats do occur on issues of Evagoras I of Salamis (ca. 412-387/6 B.C.). The ankh reflects the longstanding cultural and trade contacts between Egypt and Cyprus, but its unusual form with two crossbars is otherwise noted only on coins of Nikodamas of Salamis (ca. 460-450 B.C.). It is unclear whether these observations provide a basis for suggesting the possibility of Salamis as the issuing city. The dynasty of Evelthon that ruled Salamis in the first half of the fifth century regularly employed ram types for its coinage.

This unpublished issue belongs to a group of staters formerly attributed to the obscure Cypriot city of Golgi on the basis of the Cypriot syllabic character ko or an epichoric gamma?) that normally appears in the exergue. This coin, however, is unique in its lack any clear inscription and the slight differences of the poses of the lion and bull. Here the lion seems to be preparing to leap at his unseen prey, whereas on other staters formerly attributed to Golgi it is crouching. Likewise, here the bull prepares to charge, one foreleg raised and head lowered, but on coins previously given to Golgi, the bull sometimes has its head lowered, but both forelegs touch the ground in parallel. This is a remarkable new variant from a rare and uncertain mint. Golgi was founded by Greek colonists from Sicyon under the leadership of a certain Golgos. Little is known of the city's history, but it was known for an ancient cult of Aphrodite Golgia that was thought by Pausanias to be older than even that of Aphrodite at Paphos.

Ex Hess-Leu 27 March 1956, 320; Leu 20, 1978, 152 and NFA 25, 1990, 178. From a Distinguished Northern Californian Collector and the Harlad Salvesen collection. From the Priene hoard of 1870 (IGCH 1323).

Desperate to retain her status as queen of Cappadocia, the apparently barren Antiochis presented her husband, King Ariarathes IV, with two false sons, named Ariarathes and Orophernes. These were to be heirs to the Cappadocian throne, but then something unexpected happened. Antiochis conceived and gave birth to two daughters and a son by her husband. Having produced a proper heir (the future Ariarathes V), Antiochis revealed the truth to Ariarathes IV and sent her false sons far away from Cappadocia in order to prevent them from challenging the rights of her true son. The young Ariarathes was sent off to Rome while Orophernes was dispatched to the Ionian city of Priene. Although he lived in luxury at Priene, Orophernes remained desirous of what he had lost. In 163 B.C., Ariarathes IV died and Ariarathes V became king in Cappadocia and soon provided Orophernes with his chance to claim the throne for himself. Concerned to keep his kingdom on the good side of the Romans. Ariarathes V refused a marriage alliance with the Seleukid king. Demetrios I. who ruled in Syria without the sanction of the Senate. Offended by the refusal, Demetrios I plotted to overthrow Ariarathes V and establish Orophernes as Cappadocian king. In 158 B.C., Orophernes invaded Cappadocia at the head of a Seleukid army and forced Ariarathes V to flee. Orophemes' reign in Cappadocia was brief and unpleasant. He gained a reputation for oppressing his subjects and for executing the wealthy elites of Cappadocia in order to seize their property. He is said to have deposited some 400 talents with the Prieneans as security against a reversal of fortune, which, as it turned out, was just on the horizon. The Senate demanded the restoration of Ariarathes V, but curiously did not insist that Orophernes abdicate. Nevertheless, fear of growing discontent in the Cappadocian army soon caused Orophernes to give up Cappadocia and seek safety in Syria with Demetrios I in 156 B.C. The Seleukid king accepted the failed Cappadocian monarch at his court, but found it necessary to arrest him when Orophernes entered into a conspiracy with the Antiochenes to overthrow Demetrios I. Evidently, Orophernes was not picky about which kingdom he ruled. Cappadocia or Syria did not really matter so long as he had subjects somewhere to squeeze for cash. Although his treachery certainly made Orophernes worthy of execution, Demetrios I spared his life so that he could continue to threaten the restored Ariarathes V with his release. Six years later, Demetrios I got a taste of his own medicine when Ariarathes V and other enemies found their own pretender at the Ionian city of Smyrna and proceeded to use him to overthrow the Seleukid king. What goes around comes around, even where Hellenistic rulers are concerned. Once Ariarathes V was back in power, he demanded that Priene return the 400 talents that Orophernes had drained from the kingdom. Unwilling to give this vast sum to Ariarathes V while Orophernes still lived, and hoping to keep it once he died, the Prieneans refused. In response, Ariarathes V and his powerful ally, Attalos II of Pergamon, attacked the city and plundered it to reclaim the money - with painfully high interest. This coin represents the pinnacle of Hellenistic portrait coinage. Not only is it an extremely rare piece depicting an obscure and dramatic royal personage, but the artistry of the portrait itself is superlative. Looking upon the image of Orophernes here, it is hardly a wonder that the modern Alexandrian poet, C. P. Cavafy (1866-1933), found himself moved to write a poem about the life and adventures of the Cappadocian pretender in response to the coin portrait. The reverse type, depicting Nike crowning Orophernes' name, is a grand and oft repeated Hellenistic cliché that can be traced all the way back to the coins of Lysimachos (323-281 B.C.), which feature Athena holding a Nike who crowns the king's name. Here, Nike also serves to visually express Orophernes' title Nikephoros ("Victory-bearer") but gives no hint that the Cappadocian pretender was about to drop it. Adding further to the already great interest of this particular coin is the fact that it actually belongs to the 400 talents that Orophernes left with the Prieneans for safekeeping. It is one of only six specimens that were found beneath the pedestal of a statue of Athena Polias during the early excavations at Priene in 1870. Evidently Ariarathes V and Attalos II had not managed to find everything that Orophernes had spirited away. The owl and altar mint mark combined with the treatment of the flan and the high quality of the engraving and composition all suggest that not only did Orophernes deposit his ill-gotten gains at Priene, but he had it coined there too.

Coinage in the name of Berenice belongs to a large, complex and attractive series that has benefited from much discussion in recent years. There is continual debate about the mints, dates, denominations, and weight standards, and even which Berenice is honoured: Berenice II, the wife of Ptolemy III, or Berenice Syra, the king's sister?

The traditional view is that the king's wife is honoured, but Hazzard suggests it may be the sister of Ptolemy III. He sees the coins as products of the Third Syrian War (Laodicean War), which began in 246 upon the death of the Seleucid King Antiochus II under mysterious circumstances. It caused a dynastic crisis, for he had two wives, the Seleucid Laodice and the Ptolemaic Berenice Syra, both of whom had children who were considered legitimate heirs to the Seleucid throne. When Berenice Syra and her son were murdered in 246, it eliminated Ptolemaic claims to the Seleucid throne, thus causing Ptolemy III to invade Seleucid territories. The offensive was successful, but ground to a halt when domestic crises in Egypt forced Ptolemy III to return in haste. In 241, after a series of conflicts that often took place in the realm of international politics, Ptolemy III made peace with Seleucus II, the young man who had been made king in place of his nephew. As much sense as Hazzard's suggestion makes, the case for Berenice II, a queen in her own right, is perhaps stronger. She capably ruled in Egypt in his absence. Furthermore, the portrait bears no symbols that suggest that the subject was deceased. On the earlier coinage for the deceased Arsinoe II, the bust is adorned with the divine attributes of a ram's horn and a lotus-tipped sceptre. Neither is present on the Berenice coinage, and Berenice II was alive throughout her husband's reign, whereas Berenice Syra was deceased. A third option — equally impossible to prove — is that the coinage was intentionally ambiguous so as to honour Berenice II and Berenice Syra simultaneously.

The Second Punic War was one of the defining events in the history of Rome, a city-state on the verge of becoming an imperial power. It lasted nearly a generation and tested the government, the military and the system of alliances that Rome had painstakingly built in Italy and beyond. It also caused economic devastation: to pay for the war, the Roman state resorted to credit for the first time in its history, soliciting loans from leading citizens and their ally Hieron II, king of Syracuse.

The strain is reflected in Rome's coinage: not only was gold coinage required for the first time in Rome's history, but the course of events forced a monumental change by which the Roman monetary system came to be based on the silver denarius rather than the bronze as, which had lost 80 percent of its weight in the first six years of the war. That the Romans prevailed is remarkable, for the news at the outset was terrifying. Despite Hannibal losing an eye while crossing the Apennines, his skills were in peak form: in the ambush at Lake Trasimene in 217 he killed 15,000 men and took 10,000 prisoners; and at Cannae the number of Romans and allies he killed or captured perhaps reached 50,000. The devastation of individual communities throughout Italy must have been incomprehensible, and the Romans responded with a gold coinage meant to support their war effort both in a financial and a political sense.

The janiform head of the Dioscuri (Castor and Pollux) on the obverse no doubt was meant to recall the miraculous intervention of the saviour twins so long ago at the Battle of Lake Regillus. The reverses of the staters and half-staters offered here, both struck early in the struggle against Hannibal, c. 218-216 B.C., show an oath-taking scene in which two soldiers touch the tips of their swords to a pig held by an attendant. The man on the right, un-bearded, youthful and armoured, is a Roman, and the man on the left, bearded and without armour, represents one of his Italian allies.

The meaning of this scene is clear: Rome demonstrates to her allies that the war against Carthage is a cooperative effort. This was critically important because not only did Rome need this system of alliances to survive Hannibal's invasion, but it has often been suggested that Hannibal's true goal in invading Italy was not to capture the city of Rome, but to dismantle its alliances. As such, these gold coins should be regarded as historical documents of Rome's counterpoint to Hannibal's effort to undermine its emerging empire.

The denarius (literally, "piece of 10") was introduced around 211 B.C. in response to Roman financial crises related to Hannibal's presence in Italy and the ongoing Second Punic War (218-201 B.C.). Silver shortages became acute at Rome following the disastrous Battle of Cannae (216 B.C.) and the city began to have difficulty supporting its forces in Spain and Sicily against the Carthaginian foe. The crisis was only resolved by a complete overhaul of the Roman currency system, which did away with the old quadrigati didrachms and heavy bronzes, and replaced it with a new system based on the new denarius and smaller bronze fractions of a sextantal standard. The obverse features the head of Roma wearing her distinctive Phrygian helmet — an allusion to the Trojan origin claimed by the Romans — and carries the numeral X to make clear the face value of the coin. The Dioscuri are depicted on the reverse as divine patrons of the Roman state. According to tradition, following the overthrow of the Etruscan kings and the establishment of the Roman Republic, Rome was threatened by the nearby city of Volsci and the Latin League under the leadership of the deposed Tarquinius Superbus. In order to meet this threat, the Roman Senate named Aulus Postumius Albus as dictator in 496 B.C. With great speed he led the Roman forces to meet the enemy near Lake Regillus and handily defeated the Latins before the Volscians could arrive. During the battle, the Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux were said to have appeared as radiant horsemen fighting in support of the Romans. After Postumius returned to Rome in triumph, he dedicated a temple to the Dioscuri. The Dioscuri remained the standard reverse type for Roman denarii until 170 B.C. The H that accompanies the Dioscuri on this issue has often been resolved as the initial for a mint at Hatria or Herdonea. This particular denarius, often described as "the H denarius," has a storied history in the scholarly literature of Roman Republic coinage. This rare early issue has been known since 1860, but was condemned as false by Crawford in 1975 because the three specimens known to him were said to be plated. However, the appearance of a new specimen, a round of specific gravity and metallurgical tests, and an apparent hoard context (all discussed by Witschonke in 2008) now makes it clear that "the H denarius" was an official Republican issue after all.

Q. Caecilius Metellus Pius Scipio had fled to Africa where the remaining generals of the Pompeian cause had united. The organisation of the African troops was left to Marcus Porcius Cato, great grandson of the famous "Cato the Censor". When planning the response to Julius Caesar's advance into the area, Cato foolishly decided that aristocratic rank outweighed military experience and he placed Scipio in charge of operations. Despite having been the late father-in-law to Pompey, Scipio was considerably lacking as a military commander. He had a great advantage on his side with the forces of King Juba and his elephants; Labienus and Petreius, both of whom were experienced generals; and the sons of Pompey, Gnaeus and Sextus.

Among the towering figures of the late Republic was Gnaeus Pompeius, better known as Pompey 'the Great', who by his mid-20s had already had carned his surname Magnus. Alongside his father Pompeius Strabo and later in alliance with the warlord Sulla, Pompey lived in the eye of the storm that challenged the authority of the Senate. Time and time again Pompey (like his father) defied the Senate's requests to disband his armies. He was a merciless commander, crushing remnants of the Marian party in North Africa, fighting the rebel Sertorius in Spain, crushing the slave-army of Spartacus in Southern Italy, cleansing the eastern Mediterranean of pirates, and delivering the final defeat to Rome's great enemy in Asia, Mithradates VI of Pontus. After his great successes in Asia, Pompey joined Crassus and Julius Caesar to form the First Triumvirate in 60 B.C., which remained intact until 53, when Crassus died in battle against the Parthians. Soon Pompey found himself allied with the Senate against Caesar, which resulted in Caesar crossing the Rubicon in 49, forcing Pompey and his allies to flee to Greece. In the following year their conflict shifted to Greek soil, at Pharsalus, where Pompey was defeated in the famous battle, after which he fled to Egypt and was swiftly murdered. This rare denarius was struck by Pompey's eldest son, Pompey Junior, presumably at the Spanish mint of Corduba shortly before the Battle of Munda on March 17, 45. At this battle the Pompeians suffered another crushing defeat to Julius Caesar. With the possible exception of civic bronzes of Soli-Pompeiopolis in Cilicia, no portrait of Pompey appears on coinage until after his death, thus making the series to which this coin belongs his first securely dateable portrait coins.

Sextus Pompeius was the youngest son of Pompey the Great. After his father was defeated by Julius Caesar at the Battle of Pharsalus (48 B.C.), he joined him on Lesbos before they both fled to Egypt. The young Sextus was horrified when his father stepped off the boat at Alexandria and was promptly killed. He then joined his brother Gnaeus and senators opposed to Caesar in North Africa, but when Caesar's advance showed that resistance in the region would be crushed, the brothers escaped to Hispania. There they were defeated by Caesar at the Battle of Munda (45 B.C.), marking the end of the Caesarean civil war. Gnaeus Pompeius was captured and executed for his dogged opposition, but Sextus again escaped. Moving on to Sicily, Sextus Pompeius used the island as a base for raising an army and a fleet with which to challenge the heirs of Caesar. Despite attempts by the triumvirs to evict him, Sextus remained strong in Sicily, even managing to capture Sardinia from Octavian in 40 B.C. In the following year, Sextus and the triumvirs agreed to the Pact of Misenum, which recognised his authority in Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, and the Peloponnesus. This settlement fell apart shortly thereafter, but Sextus handily defeated a fleet commanded by Octavian at the Battle of Messina in 37 B.C. He was worsted in 36 B.C., when Octavian's admiral, Marcus Agrippa, and the triumvir Marcus Lepidus defeated him first at Mylae and then at Naulochus. With Sicily invaded and his fleet destroyed, Sextus Pompeius fled to Asia Minor, where he was hunted down and executed in 35 B.C. This early denarius of Sextus Pompeius advertises his relationship to his father in much the same way that the coins of Octavian made much of his adoptive father, Julius Caesar. For both men, their connections to their fathers were pathways to legitimacy and power. Here the portrait of the dead Pompey the Great appears on the obverse surrounded by a Latin legend that gives Sextus his father's title, Magnus ("the Great"), purposely blurring the distinction between father and son. The portrait obverse should also be read in connection with the reverse depiction of Pietas, illustrating Sextus Pompeius' filial respect and sense of duty towards the memory of his father.

Plutarch held Cassius in low regard, describing him as a man who was not well liked and who ruled his soldiers through fear. He wrote: "...Cassius was known to be a man of violent and uncontrolled passions, whose craving for money had often tempted him to stray from the path of justice, and it therefore seemed natural that his motive for fighting, wandering about the empire and risking his life was not to win liberty for his fellow-countrymen, but to secure some great place for himself." Plutarch has precisely the opposite to say of Cassius' co-conspirator: "Brutus' virtues, on the other hand, made him popular with the rank and file, beloved by his friends, and admired by the nobility, while even his enemies found it impossible to hate him." With this in mind one can imagine the simmering conflict between the two leaders, with Cassius being increasingly resentful of Brutus' popularity; indeed, their rivalry was no less significant than that of their opponents, Marc Antony and Octavian. By the time they met at Sardis and were hailed imperator by their troops, the strains of partnership had reached an intolerable pitch. Plutarch states: "...as often happens in great enterprises in which a large number of friends and commanders are engaged, there had been some sharp differences and mutual accusations had been exchanged. So...their first action was to meet in a room face to face. The doors were shut, and with no one else present the two men first began blaming one another and then fell to recriminations and counter-charges. These soon led to indignant reproaches and tears, and their friends, who were amazed at the vehemence and bitterness of their anger, were afraid that the quarrel might end in violence." This confrontation occurred just before Brutus departed to campaign in Lycia and Cassius set out to capture Rhodes, which he did successfully, but with extreme severity. We may be sure this aureus was struck after Cassius' defeat of the Rhodians, for the reverse depicts an aplustre, a ship ornament that symbolized naval victory. The flowers at the extremities of the ornament suggest Rhodes since the rose had been the symbol of that island for many centuries. Its symbolism is sealed when the other issue of this legate is considered: it shows a crab holding an aplustre in its claws, above a loose diadem and a rose. This rose is a certain reference to Rhodes, and it appears below the crab, the badge of the island of Cos, near where the decisive battle took place. The loosened diadem might symbolize the kingship Cassius claimed to have undone at Rhodes (Plutarch, Brutus, 30) or it could be a general reference to the termination of Julius Caesar's tyranny some two years before.

From a Swiss private collection formed between 1950 and 1980.

This aureus ranks high amongst the prizes of Roman numismatics. Its remarkable portrait has been the subject of much debate, especially since it is different from the one on denarii issued at the same time by Ahenobarbus, the man who unwittingly was the great-grandfather of the emperor Nero. Here we have a fleshy, indulgent, almost Vitellian portrait that is filled with character and individuality. On the denarii we have a portrait of a thin man that is stiff and noticeably stylised. The difference in the engraving quality may be due to the fact that a better artist worked on the aureus dies, but it is more likely that the denarius portrait was meant to represent an ancestor and that the aureus portrait is of the imperator himself. On both issues the name AHENOBAR appears alone on the obverse, and his title is relegated to the reverse. To many scholars this suggests that both portraits are of Ahenobarbus' ancestors, but that argument is not conclusive. Had Ahenobarbus placed his portrait on one of the issues, the aureus would have been a good choice since it circulated amongst the most influential members of his retinue. The temple of Neptune on the reverse may help narrow the portrait down to two men in the family who either built or restored such a temple. Most agree it is the Aedes Neptuni, the temple of Neptune on the Campus Martius, but some consider it to be one attributed to Domitius Ahenobarbus, who was consul in 192 B.C., and others favor the temple that the coin-issuing Ahenobarbus vowed between 42 and 38 B.C. (and seems to have realised in 32, when he was consul). Philip Hill considers the temple to have "...every appearance of being a 'blueprint' rather than representing a building which had been in existence for more than a century and a half." He notes that the actual temple was hexastyle - having six columns on its façade - rather than tetrastyle, as it is shown on the coin. If the temple is the one attributable to the coin- issuing Ahenobarbus, then we might rightly describe the portrait as that of the imperator himself.

Few great leaders in history have had an ally as capable and reliable as Marcus Agrippa (a close second in Roman history is Diocletian's colleague Maximian). In many respects, Agrippa was the bricks-and-mortar of Octavian-Augustus' career: not only did he help build it, but he was perpetually relied upon to maintain it, even to the point of creating potential heirs to Augustus' throne through his marriage to Augustus' daughter Julia. On this denarius, struck at a mint moving with Octavian in 38 B.C., the obverse honours Octavian (in the portrait and in the inscription) and the deified father Julius Caesar (in the portrait and in the inscription), while the reverse is entirely devoted to Agrippa. Except for the copper asses struck in Agrippa's name long after his death, and certain provincial coinages (such as the massive issues of Nemausus), there were only two occasions in which Imperial coins were struck for Agrippa. This denarius belongs to the first issue in which three types were struck. Each has the common feature of Agrippa's inscription on the reverse, and their obverses differ in that Julius Caesar is portrayed on the aureus and the head of Octavian or the confronted heads of Caesar and Octavian appear on the denarii.

As the struggle between Marc Antony and Octavian dragged on in the 30s B.C., the geographical and political lines became ever more defined. Antony had become entrenched in the Eastern Mediterranean, and in doing so had allied himself with Cleopatra VII, queen of Egypt, whose original supporter in Rome, Julius Caesar, had been murdered years before. She had his son, Caesarion, at her side, but she needed an ally like Antony if she hoped to preserve Egypt from the ever-widening grasp of Rome. Importantly, Antony was easier to manipulate than Octavian, who had no sympathy for Cleopatra's motives. Although this woman of blinding intellect may have found her marriage to Antony a degrading experience, personally, she was crafty enough to realise it was her only chance at survival. Hence, she was probably eager to issue dual-portrait coins, such as the denarius offered here. Little more indication is necessary to recognise that Cleopatra had effectively dominated her husband, the Roman warlord Antony.

Egypt would play a surprising role in the imperatorial period throughout much of the civil war. Having been under Ptolemaic rule since the death of Alexander the Great it would come down to the manipulative Cleopatra VII to try and save her dynasty. Shown on coinage not to be the great beauty that has been portrayed in film she was rather a master at playing her odds to maximum success. And Egypt itself would be: the scene of the first romance between Caesar and Cleopatra; the site of the killing of Pompey the Great; the place where Cleopatra captivated Marc Antony and showed him "how to live as a king"; and it would be the place where Antony and Cleopatra would finally die.

Cleopatra had seduced Julius Caesar and managed to secure her right to rule with his support when he settled the dispute with her young brother Ptolemy XIII. She was staying in Rome as a "guest" of Caesar at the time of his assassination. She was able to return to Egypt and watch things play out between the successors of Caesar and the last loyalists to the republican cause. When it became clear that the Caesareans would win she formed an allegiance with Marc Antony.

It must have seemed a fortuitous move on her part when Antony divorced Octavia and wed her. Surely if Antony could maintain his power she would continue to rule Egypt unimpeded. She had placed great reliance on this relationship by supplying Antony with both funds and ships to support his efforts against Octavian. It must have come as a complete surprise that she gave Octavian just the ammunition that he needed to declare war on Antony and, in the process, gain the blessing of the Roman senate. Overtly, war was declared on Cleopatra – not Antony.

It came to the point where she could now see what a great risk she had taken. Her only hope was that Antony would prevail and her dynasty would be preserved. The battle of Actium would prove to be the turning point in the battle between the two triumvirs. Antony was significantly supported in this battle by ships supplied by the queen and when the battle was lost so, in turn, was any remaining hope that she had chosen the correct alliance.

It is reported that in a last ditch effort she offered herself to Octavian with the hope that she could salvage Egypt. It was not to be and Cleopatra was eliminated and Egypt was lost. It is important to recognize that the new province of Egypt was not to be owned by Rome but to be the personal property of Octavian. The wealth of this territory would not fill the coffers at Rome but rather the pockets of the, soon to be, emperor himself.

The role of Egypt as a major supplier of grain would increase with Roman control. It would become a key factor in managing the ever growing population of Rome itself. Here the coin says much but in a most interesting way. Egypt was indeed captured, but not for the empire. It was captured for Octavian. It had to be a most personal of coin types for the sole survivor of the civil war. The historical importance of this coin cannot be overstated.

The cistophorus was minted under Claudius for the first time since the great coinage of this denomination by Augustus. The Claudian issues were nowhere near as extensive and the pieces that are seen usually show significant wear indicating that they circulated heavily. RIC indicates that these issues may all be commemorative in nature and were not intended to be a regular coinage for the area. There are four main types of the cistophorus issues of Claudius: those including Agrippina (his wife); the issues dedicated to Artemis (Diana) and her temple, as above; the issues with ROM ET AVG temple reverses; and, late in his reign, the issues identifying Nero as his successor.

The revolt of Clodius Macer in North Africa gave further momentum to the downfall of Nero, who had survived the uprising of Vindex in Gaul and was dealing with Galba's more formidable challenge from Spain. It was clear from the outset that Galba had intended to replace Nero as emperor, yet that may not have been the professed goal of Clodius Macer.

One remarkable aspect of his coinage was the use of S.C. (senatus consulto) on denarii. That inscription otherwise had not been used on Roman silver coins since about 40 B.C., and its presence was meaningful. Furthermore, on his portrait coins Macer is shown bareheaded; the fact that he does not wear the laurel crown of an emperor is noteworthy. Both may have been intended to assure the senate that his revolt was principally – if not exclusively – aimed at ending the tyranny of Nero.

While the coins of his revolutionary contemporaries usually are restricted to the themes of victory, unity and recovery, most of Macer's issues are restorative, recalling the battle of Actium in 31 B.C. He must have thought it no less than an omen that Rome's new revolutionary war was being waged in the centenary year of Actium, a battle that had effectively ended Rome's previous civil war.

The legionary denarii that Marc Antony struck leading up to Actium were still a common sight in circulation a century later (indeed, hoards show that heavily worn examples circulated well into the 3rd Century). Macer adopted both of Antony's designs: the galley as a reverse type for his portrait denarii and the legionary eagle-and-standards in combination with four obverse types – the heads of Africa and a lion, the bust of Victory and the standing figure of Libertas.

Macer also followed the arrangement of the inscriptions on Antony's legionary coins. The war galley design was accompanied by Antony's personal inscriptions, and with Macer's restoration it bore a personal inscription that identified him as the legatus Augusti propraetore of Africa. Antony's eagle-and-standards reverse named various legions and specialised units; Macer followed suit by naming the two legions under his control, the Legion I Macriana and the Legion III Augusta. He had raised the former in the course of his rebellion and had originally commanded the latter in Numidia.

One of the best investments ever made by the Romans was their road system, which included at least 250,000 miles of roads designed for high-speed travel that was reliable virtually year-round. No less than eleven of these major roads entered Rome, giving rise to the phrase "all roads lead to Rome". The system gave the Romans a distinct advantage over their enemies in war and their partners in commerce; in essence, it gave them an unparalleled ability to grow and to maintain their empire. The construction of these super-roads was no mean feat: it required engineering expertise, time, and significant resources. It also required a powerful centralized government and a societal belief that the enormous short-term expenses of construction were justifiable in view of the long-term benefits that would accrue. With this in mind it is hardly surprising that the construction of roads (and other architectural feats, such as the building of aqueducts, harbours and temples) is commemorated on coinage. Trajan was never shy about using coinage for this purpose, and here he celebrates his via Traiana, a new road in Italy linking Beneventum and Brundisium. It took a path alongside the famous Appian Way, which by then had been used as a military highway for more than four centuries.

Ex Gorny & Mosch 195, 2011, 485 and Gorny & Mosch 215, 2013, 490 sales.

At some point in 303 it would seem that the mint of Scrdica was founded using personnel and equipment that was brought some 120 miles north from Thessalonica, which then ceased to issue coins. In retrospect it is ironic that this occurred in 303, for in that very year both Diocletian and Galerius seem to have visited Thessalonica to attend the dedication of a new triumphal arch erected there to honor the defeat of the Persian King Narses. In any event, starting in 303 Serdica became the principal mint for the Balkans region. The numismatic evidence for the shift of mints is strong enough that many scholars believe it to show that in this period Galerius moved his capital from the Aegean port city of Thessalonica to Serdica, resulting in a greater concentration of Roman forces along the Danube. Galerius was quite familiar with the area, for we are told that he was raised on a farm near Serdica after his parents fled their original home in trans-Danubian Dacia to escape the periodic raids of the Carpi. This argenteus dates to the period of the Second Tetrarchy, from May 1, 305 to July 25, 306, for Severus II bears the title of Caesar. The coins produced at Serdica in this narrow period are well documented by Sutherland and Carson, yet pieces such as this argenteus remind us that the published record is incomplete. Indeed, when the sixth volume of RIC was released in 1967 the only argentei of Serdica known for this period were of the emperors Constantius I and Galerius. Subsequent discoveries revealed that this issue also included argentei for the Caesars Severus II and Maximinus II (as well as, from the subsequent period, argentei for the new Caesar Constantine I; see Lanz 123, lot 878). Though these additions provide a more complete numismatic record, in this case their discovery was not unexpected. In this same period at Serdica, gold aurei and billon nummi were struck for both of the Augusti and both Caesars, as well as for the retired Augusti Diocletian and Maximian. Thus, the absence of argentei for the Caesars was somewhat surprising. At present, argentei of Serdica for the Caesars of the Second Tetrarchy include - at least - issues of the first two officinae for Severus II and of all five officinae for Maximinus II.

This aureus testifies to the definitive adoption and the ensuing appointment of Tiberius as Augustus heir. It is worth mentioning how the minting of this extremely rare issue occurred so shortly before the death of the emperor, about whose demise various leading inferences have been made. We indeed know from sources that Augustus retired to Nola and, suspicious of his entourage, would eat only figs from his gardens. All the same, this cautious diet did not save him from a possible death by poisoning. Some have suggested the involvement of Livia, a powerful and controversial personality who may have been the shadowy orchestrator behind at least some of the inexplicable deaths of many heirs previously appointed by Augustus. The first to succumb to a sudden and questionable disease, in 23 BC, was his nephew Marcellus, son of the emperor's sister Octavia and most loved potential heir. Next in line for succession was now Agrippa, but he also was not to outlive the Emperor, for an untimely albeit natural death took him in 12 BC. Then it was the turn of Agrippa's sons Lucius Caesar, who died of a suspicious illness in Gaul in 2 AD, his brother Gaius having died two years previously of a fatal wound while at war in the East. Agrippa Postumus, younger brother of Gaius and Lucius, thus became the last male descendant of the Emperor who, if the truth be told, despised him for his intractability and madness, to the point of promoting a "senatus consultu" to have him transferred to an island, in perpetual isolation and surrounded by a body of soldiers (Suet., Augusti Vita, 65). But after Augustus' death the position of Agrippa, next of blood, as legitimate heir madness notwithstanding - could not be challenged and so he was immediately disposed of by one of his guardians. Tiberius path to the throne was finally clear.

Italian Revivalist gold brooch, supposedly 1850s-1880s, signed FLORENTIN on the reverse. The aureus is held by four prongs, within a decorated loop which is held between the snouts of two confronted lion's head protome. The lions' mane is stylized with a series of bumps (gold pearls), and their bodies are joined together into a geometric shape - on top a decorative triangular motif of large and small globes. The method for securing the brooch-pin, with a coiled wire hinge for the pin and a cone-shaped catch, is typical for the period.

Whilst Castellani specialized in neo-Etruscan granulation work, the intricate decoration on this piece by Florentin is done with a design of ad astragali wires which was also applied by soldering, like the granulation. We have not found another example of lion heads being used to 'hold' a coin, but the motif fits well the taste of the time, and could have been inspired by 4th/3rd century BC Greek gold earrings in the collection of G. P. Campana (acquired by the French government in 1861 and much copied). Such confronted lion heads could also be found in ancient bracelets, for example on a 4th century BC Scythian one from the Temir-Gora find of 1869 in South Russia (which was immediately copied by Elkington & Co and others), but also on a gold-plated one with embossed gold terminals from the 'Curium Treasure' of 1875 in Cyprus (which was immediately copied by Tiffany's). Such archaeological pieces were fashionable worldwide worldwide, and we can note the lion's head bracelet in so-called Assyrian style which Robert Phillips did for Lady Layard in 1869, but the quality and style of this specific coin brooch indicates an Italian work. Florentin cannot be found amongst the jewellers listed in the contemporary touristic guides, such as John Murray's Handbook of Rome an its environs (many editions), so we do not know his first name or his address, but his surname reveals a French origin, like the jeweller Ernesto Pierret (born in Paris in 1824 and active in Rome from c.1845 onwards), whose work of great quality resembles this piece.

The best overview of the jewels of this period can be found in: Diana Scarisbrick, "La Moda del gioiello archeologico: Castellani e gli altri", in I Castellani e l'oreficeria archeologica italiana, Rome 2005, pp. 284-299.

With Galba, the numismatist is presented with a variety of portrait styles because he minted in several locations –Spain, Gaul, Rome and briefly in North Africa after the fall of Clodius Macer – each of which had a distinctive local style. The Spanish mint at which Galba produced his main coinage is thought to be Tarraco, his old capital city. The locals were all too familiar with what Suetonius (Galba 12.1) tells us were Galba's two prominent characteristics: cruelty and greed. As an example, Suetonius reports that when the people of Tarraco gave him a golden crown from the ancient temple of Jupiter described as weighing 15 pounds, Galba demanded of them three more ounces of gold, for upon melting the crown fell short of its advertised weight by precisely that amount.

Very rare and among the finest aurei of Galba in existence. A realistic portrait struck in very high relief on a full flan, virtually as struck and almost Fdc 250'000

Almost more remarkable than Galba's legacy as an emperor for seven months in 68 and 69 is the life he enjoyed before he claimed the purple. He was among the wealthiest men in the empire, and is said not to have travelled anywhere, not even on a casual afternoon ride, with less than ten thousand gold pieces. Being so wealthy and belonging to a noble family, the Suplicii, it is not surprising that he held many important posts in Rome and in the provinces, and was a personal acquaintance of the Julio-Claudians. Galba began his association with the Julio-Claudians with a pinch on the cheek from Augustus when he was a child, and thereafter he was a personal acquaintance of the emperors from Tiberius onward to Nero, whom he overthrew in 68. Agrippina Junior apparently was infatuated with him, and he enjoyed especially close friendships with Claudius and Livia. Suetonius tells us Livia made Galba her principal heir, leaving him 500,000 aurei, but that Tiberius nullified her bequest on a technicality, reducing the amount to only 5,000. The reverse of this aureus depicts the standing figure of Livia, who had been deified since the accession of her grandson Claudius in 41. The point is clear: Galba advertises his famous attachment to the early Julio-Claudians, and specifically to the first empress Livia. In doing so he offers proof of his fitness to wear the purple as the first non-Julio-Claudian to claim that honour. It was an appropriate message in this age of chaos and civil war, when faith in the more recent Julio-Claudians had been justifiably shaken, and Galba proposed a return to the severitas of a bygone era.

While Sabina's mother, Matidia, may have been quite fond of Hadrian, the same cannot be said of his wife Sabina. Their marriage in 100 essentially guaranteed Hadrian as successor to Trajan, but it did not bring with it domestic bliss. Hadrian was a flagrant adulterer, both with married women and handsome youths such as his favourite companion, the Bithynian youth Antinoüs. Hadrian, however, would not tolerate such behaviour from his wife; in 121 or 122 he dismissed his praetorian prefect Septicius Clarus and the historian Suctonius, both court officials with whom Sabina had developed close relationships. After an unpleasant thirty-six year marriage, Sabina died in 136 or 137. It was widely rumoured that her husband, knowing that his death was not far off, either had her poisoned or forced her to commit suicide.

Despite somewhat obscure equestrian origins in the provincial Libyan city of Leptis Magna, Septimius Severus gained senatorial rank under Marcus Aurelius (A.D. 161-180) and worked his way through the cursus honorum until he was appointed governor of Pannonia Superior by Aurelius' son and successor, Commodus, in A.D. 191. At the end of A.D. 192, Commodus was assassinated and the position of emperor was given to Pertinax, the Urban Prefect of Rome. However, when he failed to buy the loyalty of the Praetorian Guard, he too was murdered three months into his reign. When the death of Pertinax became known, the forces under Severus' command proclaimed him the new emperor. Severus immediately marched on Rome in order to consolidate his position in the capital. Meanwhile, the Praetorian Guard auctioned off the imperial title at Rome to the wealthy Didius Julianus. Public outrage at this shameful development caused Claudius Albinus and Pescennius Niger, commanders in Britannia and Syria, respectively, to proclaim themselves as rivals. Thus A.D. 193 became known as the Year of the Five Emperors. As Septimius Severus neared Rome, Julianus was murdered, permitting him to claim the capital without resistance. Concerned about facing simultaneous enemies in the West and the East, Severus negotiated with Albinus, offering him the position of Caesar (junior co-emperor) in return for support against Niger. Albinus agreed and thus freed Severus to defeat Niger at the Battle of Issus in A.D. 194. A military man to the core, in A.D. 195, Septimius Severus made war on the Parthian Empire in response to interference in the Roman client-kingdoms of Mesopotamia. Returning to Rome in triumph, Severus appointed his eldest son, Caracalla, as Caesar (junior co-emperor) before marching against his former ally, Clodius Albinus, who had declared himself emperor and invaded Gaul in A.D. 196. Albinus was defeated near Lugdunum and committed suicide the following year, leaving Septimus Severus the undisputed master of the Roman world. The business of the Year of the Five Emperors was finally at an end. In A.D. 198, Severus raised Caracalla to the position of Augustus (full co-emperor) and made his younger son, Geta, Caesar before embarking upon a grand new war in the East. This conflict, which continued until A.D. 199, achieved the capture of the western Parthian capital at Ctesiphon and a negotiated relationship with the Arab caravan kingdom of Hatra. At the conclusion of the war, Severus and his family returned to Rome via Syria and Egypt. He spent the next several years celebrating the Saecular Games and settling the affairs of North Africa. Problems in Britannia led Severus and his sons to campaign against the northern tribes of the island in A.D. 208. Together they pushed back the Caledonians and reoccupied the Antonine Wall. Thanks to this northern advance and the gains made in the East, the Roman Empire reached its greatest territorial extent under Septimius Severus. Unfortunately, the emperor had gained the world at the cost of his family. It became increasingly apparent to Severus that jealousy had deeply poisoned the relationship between Caracalla and Geta. When he fell ill at Eboracum (York) in A.D. 210, he hoped in vain that his sons would carry on and work together for the good of the empire. He died on 4 February A.D. 211. Before the end of the year Geta had joined him in the Underworld, murdered at the order of Caracalla. This wonderful gold aureus celebrates the arrival (adventus) of Severus at Rome following his first Parthian war in A.D. 196. On the reverse of the coin, Septimius Severus, now the undisputed emperor of the Roman world, enters Rome on horseback, raising his hand in greeting and led by a figure often described as a soldier, but who is clearly Roma, the personification of Rome. She is distinguished by her Amazonian dress and bared breast - features not in line the common Roman soldier of the second century. Similar adventus scenes, in which emperors on foot greet or are accompanied by Roma are known from earlier coins of Hadrian (A.D. 117-138) and a relief panel from the Arch of Marcus Aurelius. As such, the reverse type of Severus' aureus casts him in the tradition of the "good" emperors of the second century, but his mounted depiction gives his entry into Rome a somewhat greater triumphal quality than the earlier representations of Hadrian and Marcus Aurelius on foot.

Having settled the affairs of the Roman Empire in the East, in A.D. 208, Septimius Severus turned to the West and prepared for new campaigns in Britannia. The province, which consisted primarily of the territory of modern England and Wales, was frequently troubled by the Caledonians, an ancient people of what is now Scotland. Over the course of decades, the Caledonians had developed the unwelcome habit of overrunning Hadrian's Wall and the Antonine Wall (both intended to keep them out) to plunder the northern reaches of Britannia. Determined to put a stop to these invasions, Severus and his son, Caracalla, landed in Britannia with an army of some 40,000 men and marched north. As they marched, Severus established new forts and strengthened established ones along the way. Repairs were made to sections of the two walls and an expansive new legionary camp was attached to the Antonine Wall in order to increase the manpower defending it. Severus then led a difficult campaign through the entirety of Caledonia to reach the northern tip of the island. On the way, the Roman forces suffered from the cold, wet weather and Caledonian guerilla tactics, but in the end Severus compelled the Caledonians to sue for peace and give up the Central Lowlands in A.D. 210. Unfortunately, the peace did not last and the Caledonians revolted before the year was out. Severus swore vengeance and prepared for a terrible campaign of extermination from his base at Eboracum (modern York). His plans never came to fruition, for while at Eboracum an illness that had troubled him since he came to Britannia took his life in A.D. 211. After the death of his father, Caracalla briefly fought the Caledonians before making a peace settlement and withdrawing south of Hadrian's Wall. The Romans would never again reach into Caledonian territory. The reverse type of this as depicts a monumental bridge over a waterway while a small boat sails below. The design copies an earlier type of Trajan (RIC II 569), depicting the bridge that he constructed across the Danube during his celebrated Dacian Wars, but here probably serves to represent a bridge built across the Firth of Forth during Severus' Caledonian campaign. Severus' coinage frequently took typological cues from the coins of earlier "good" emperors as a means of connecting his reign to the less troubled times of the Antonine Age. By alluding to a coin associated with Trajan's Dacian Wars, Severus' Caledonian campaign and its constructions were given an elevated status and Severus was cast in the same light as the Optimus Princeps.

When the Emperor Elagabalus was killed by the Praetorian Guard at the behest of his grandmother in A.D. 222, he was succeeded by his popular 13-year-old cousin, Severus Alexander. The reign of Severus Alexander, strongly influenced by his powerful mother, Julia Mamaea, was generally prosperous for Rome and the Empire, but miscalculations with respect to the army ultimately brought it to a bad end.

In a conscious attempt to distance Severus Alexander from the excesses of Elagabalus, the young emperor was surrounded with able advisors like the famous jurist Ulpian and the senatorial historian Cassius Dio. Such men assisted him in reorganizing the municipal administration of the capital and in legal reforms, many of which were aimed at improving public morals and reducing displays of excessive luxury. New laws enacted under Severus Alexander also did much to protect the property rights of soldiers and their ability to pass on their possessions to heirs of their own choosing. In A.D. 229-230, he also raised the purity of the silver denarius from 43% at the outset of his reign to 45% and then 50.5%.

In A.D. 230, Ardashir, the first of the Sasanian monarchs, invaded Roman Mesopotamia and besieged Nisibis, prompting Severus Alexander to lead a campaign against the upstart Sasanian Empire. The emperor arrived in Syria in A.D. 231, where he first attempted to negotiate a return to the borders that had existed under the late Parthians. When the negotiations collapsed in the following year, Severus Alexander and Ardashir moved on to open war. Several inconclusive battles were fought and the emperor was successful in forcing the Sasanian Persians to withdraw from Mesopotamia, but he could do nothing to overthrow Ardashir or his dynasty.

In A.D. 233 Severus Alexander returned to Rome where he celebrated a grand triumph as a latter-day Alexander the Great, the conqueror of Persia. However, even while this was going on new trouble was brewing in the North. The Germanic Alemanni overran and destroyed the Roman limes (frontier fortifications) near the Black Forest, threatening invasion deeper into Roman territory. The emperor marched to the Rhine frontier to halt their advance, but once there he tried to put an end to their onslaught through diplomacy and bribery. This soft approach rankled with the legionaries, who thought such negotiation to be dishonorable, and on March 19, A.D. 235, members of Legio II Parthica and Legio XXII Primigenia mutinied and killed both Severus Alexander and his mother at Mogontiacum (Mainz). The mutineers proclaimed Maximinus Thrax, a rough and ready prefect of Legio II Parthica, to be the new emperor.

The murder of Severus Alexander was a watershed moment for the Roman Empire. It not only brought an end to the dynasty founded by Septimius Severus in A.D. 193, but marked the beginning of the Crisis of the Third Century and the destructive age of the Barracks Emperors.

This stunning and exceedingly rare aureus of Severus Alexander advertises some of his improvement works in Rome as it shows on the reverse the features of the Nymphaeum divi Alexandri, one of the three nymphaea explicity listed by name (the others are Nymphaea Tria on the Aventine and the Nymphaea Iovis beneath the present-day Piazza S. Silvestro) of the fifteen assessed in the city of Rome, according to the catalogue of the regionses of the fourth century AD.

It was constructed in A.D. 226 as the terminus of a new aqueduct-the Aqua Alexandrina-built on the Esquiline Hill as part of a project to enlarge the old Baths of Nero. The castellum (tower) of the Nymphaeum is still visible in the Piazza Vittorio Emmanuelle to this day (at the fork of the Labicana and Collatina streets) and is fed by the Aqua Iulia (the "Mostra"). Originally, as depicted on the coin the Nymphaeum took the form of a triple triumphal arch surmounted by an image of the emperor riding in a quadriga, although in A.D. 226 Severus Alexander had yet to win a notable military victory or celebrate a triumph. Victories flank the main building while statues stand within the arches and in smaller arches below. The water from the fountain gathered in the pool enclosure at the base.

The same Nymphaeum types also appeared on contemporary denarii, sestertii, and asses. Divergent details on some asses led to scholarly debate about whether some examples depicted the Nymphaeum and others the Baths until it was discovered that the "Baths" issues were really Nymphaeum asses with tooled modifications.

Severus Alexander's achievements in civil engineering are summarised in the "Life of Alexander Severo" (Chap. 25) contained in the Historia Augusta, as follows: "He rebuilt the edificies raised by his predecessors and saw to the erecting of many others, including the Thermae named after him, sited next to the old Thermae of Nero and fed by the aqueduct now called Alexandrine".

As successor to his cousin Elagabalus, whose fanatical behaviour made him unpopular in virtually all social circles, Severus Alexander represented a return to normalcy – or at least as close as was possible. He was hailed Caesar in the middle of 221 as a counterbalance to Elagabalus, and early in the next year he replaced his cousin as emperor, for Elagabalus made the fatal error of forcing the praetorian guardsmen to choose between them. Both had been about 14 years old when they ascended the throne, but Alexander proved more willing to take the advice of his family elders: his mother Julia Mamaea and his grandmother Julia Maesa. Docile by nature, Alexander showed little desire for independent action, and the careful maternal tutelage he received no doubt contributed to his reign lasting thirteen years. When this important aureus was struck, Alexander was 17 or 18 years old, and already had reigned longer than his unfortunate cousin. Alexander is shown distributing coins to a diminutive figure who climbs a ladder at the front of the platform upon which Liberalitas stands beside the emperor, who sits on a curule chair. The rectangular object held by Liberalitas is traditionally described as a counting device (an abacus), but it might be a coin counter in the form of a flat board with shallow, coin-size depressions matching the appropriate number of coins required for distribution. Such a device no doubt would have added greatly to the efficiency and the accuracy of such distributions.

Maximus enjoyed a most extraordinary childhood in Rome considering he was descended of mixed Gothic and Alan blood. His father, Maximinus I, was a towering and powerful man who for decades had caught the eye of emperors. The first was Septimius Severus, who saw him compete in a wrestling match in Thrace. Severus did much to promote Maximinus, as did Caracalla, Elagabalus and Severus Alexander. When the latter was murdered by mutinous soldiers on the German front in 235, Maximinus was hailed emperor by the troops, marking the first time a man had risen from the ranks to become a Roman emperor. Though a novelty at the time, such events were to become commonplace in this era of 'military anarchy.' His father's success in the army had brought Maximus into lofty social circles in Rome. Indeed, the young man had to delay his forthcoming marriage to Junia Fadilla, a descendant of Antoninus Pius, in order to join his father on the German front after his acclamation. Maximus, then about 20 years old, was raised to the rank of Caesar in 235 or 236. After serving at least two years at his father's side in army encampments, he was murdered near Aquileia, after which his severed head was delivered to Rome.

The life of Otacilia Severa, like so many Roman empresses, is largely a mystery. Little of substance is known of her except what can be gleaned from surviving artifacts and the occasional Imperial record. Her portrait is familiar from her numerous coins, and it is known that she was honoured with the titles mother of the army, the senate and the empire. There is also good reason to believe that she was a direct relative – perhaps even the daughter – of a certain Severianus (or Severus) whom her husband appointed to a high position in the Balkans. Philip was, after all, partial to promoting relatives, including his brother Priscus, who remained in the east as praetorian prefect and rector Orientis. (Unfortunately Philip's nepotism backfired as the cruel exactions of Priscus sparked the revolt of Jotapian and the apparent incompetence of Severianus required his replacement by the prefect of Rome, Trajan Decius, who restored order and eventually overthrew Philip.) Beyond this we must rely on later Christian writers who suggest she and her husband were Christians, or at the very least sympathised with the plight of Christians. As such they serve as a foil to the subsequent regimes of Trajan Decius and Trebonianus Gallus, both of whom were particularly harsh to Christians. It is even suggested that Otacilia Severa sought penance from Saint Babylas, Bishop of Antioch, for the role she played in the murder of Gordian III. Unfortunately, there is no supporting evidence for their pro-Christian activities, and some of their actions seem to contradict the supposition. Even Otacilia's death is veiled in mystery: she may have been murdered along with her son by the praetorian guardsmen, or, as one source suggests, she retired unharmed.

Uranius Antoninus produced a remarkably diverse and interesting coinage, especially considering he reigned so briefly, and under such dire circumstances. It consists of imperial-style aurei, excessively rare denarii struck from aureus dies, and three types of provincial-style coinage — silver 'tetradrachms,' billon tetradrachms and large bronzes.

His aurei, which present his full name, Lucius Julius Aurelius Sulpicius Uranius Antoninus and bear a portrait reminiscent of Elagabalus, were struck at a heavy standard for the period, between 55 and 60 per Roman pound. His contemporaries lagged far behind: Trebonianus Gallus (251-253) struck aurei at 1/90th of a Roman pound, and though Valerian and Gallienus struck their aurei at 1/70th of a pound in their accession year of 253/254, they subsequently fell to the same light standard of Gallus.

His coinage includes an issue of provincial bronzes dated to the 565th year of the Seleucid Era, thus providing an anchor date of 253/254 for his rebellion. Even so, the reverse type of this aureus is of chronological value, as it suggests Uranius' rebellion and coinage could not be earlier than 248 since it copies a type that Philip I (244-249) introduced in that year for the millennial games in Rome.

In the chaos that enveloped the West during the mid- and later 3rd Century, resourceful generals were valued for their ability to spare their fellow Romans the horror of invasion, and were feared for their ability to inspire their legions – purposely or inadvertently – to rebellion. Such was the case in Germany and Gaul in the fall of 260, when a commander named Marcus Cassianius Latinius Postumus assumed the purple some months after news was received of the capture of Valerian I by the Sasanians. The position held by Postumus is not clear. He may have been a commander or a governor of one of the Germanies. The Historia Augusta describes him as Transrhenani limitis dux et Galliae praeses and Aurelius Victor as barbaris per Galliam praesidebat. The claim in the Historia Augusta that he came to power with the assistance of his eponymous father is considered by most to be an invention typical of that source. This aureus seems to have been struck in the first quarter of 262, by which time Postumus had been in power for well more than a year. The reverse records that he was celebrating the third renewal of his tribunician power and had entered his third consulship, presumably awarded on January 1, 262. Schulte's die study of Gallo-Roman gold reveals a complex and well-conceived series of issues under Postumus, spanning from the start of his revolt to at least early 269. Within nine of the 12 issues identified by Schulte there is significant die- linking, which may suggest each was produced in comparatively narrow time frames. The largest emissions seem to have occurred from the fall of 263 through the start of 264, and in the beginning of 268.

Marcus Claudius Tacitus appears to have been in Campania serving as suffect consul when Aurelian was assassinated in A.D. 275. The Senate elected him to be Aurelian's successor, a decision that was ratified by the army. This was a remarkable event, for the army and Senate were frequently at odds about the creation of new emperors in the third century. As it turned out, Tacitus was destined to be the last emperor to be appointed by the Senate. Upon learning of his new, elevated position, Tacitus hurried to Rome, where he promptly instituted reforms to give greater consultative powers to the Senate, deified Aurelian, and executed his murderers. He then marched east to deal with an unruly assortment of Germanic mercenaries that had been assembled by Aurelian for a projected campaign against the Sasanian Persian Empire. With the death of Aurelian the mercenaries no longer had a paymaster and took to plundering towns. Tacitus, together with his brother, Florian, successfully defeated the mercenaries and ended their reign of terror in the East. In celebration of this event, the Senate gave Tacitus the somewhat overblown title Gothicus Maximus. The emperor next prepared to return west to deal with a new invasion of Gaul by the Franks and Alemanni, but before he could do so he was struck down by fever while passing through Tyana in Cappadocia. He died in June A.D. 276, before his promising career as emperor could really take off. Despite his recognition by the army as an able commander, Tacitus appears to have been of a literary bent. He is said to have claimed descent from the famous historian, Gaius Cornelius Tacitus (ca. A.D. 56-120), and made a habit of circulating the author's works, which had largely ceased to be read in the third century. This rare medallion illustrates Tacitus' relationship with the army, commemorating an exhortation made before the battle against the Germanic mercenaries or at the time of his accession. Imperial accessions were a common occasion for a speech before the troops and for the cementing of their loyalty with a distribution of coins and medallic gifts. The reverse belongs to a long tradition of Roman representations of speeches of emperors before the army — the adlocutio scene. It is arranged in typical fashion with the emperor and an assistant standing on a low podium before a group of soldiers. It is tempting to suggest that the second figure on the podium here might be Florian, whom Tacitus had made Praetorian Prefect. In this case, the soldiers probably represent the Practorian Guard, an important group for any emperor to pacify. Over their long history as imperial bodyguards, the Praetorians developed a disturbing tendency to murder emperors who displeased them.

Probus began his military career around A.D. 250, advancing through the ranks under Valerian and Aurelian. He held a high position in the East under Tacitus (A.D. 275-276), and when the latter died from illness or assassination Probus was proclaimed emperor by the troops under his command. This was problematic because the army with Tacitus in Asia Minor had proclaimed the Praetorian Prefect, Florian, as emperor. In order to press his claim, Probus marched against Florian. The two emperors faced each other in Cilicia, but realizing the numerical superiority of Florian's army, Probus refused to engage in a pitched battle, instead allowing the summer heat to wear down the enemy forces and break their morale. This strategy was extremely effective. At last, the heat and the inability to bring Probus to battle brought Florian's officers to their breaking point. Florian was assassinated after a reign of only two months, leaving Probus the only claimant to the throne. With his rival out of the way, in A.D. 277 Probus advanced west, pushing back the Goths on the Danube frontier and earning the title of Gothicus along the way, before moving to deal with the depredations of the Franks and Alamanni who had been crossing the Rhine frontier into Gaul. After he reached the Rhine, Probus made a special trip to Rome in order to have his imperial title ratified by the Senate. This visit to the Eternal City is the probable subject of this unique and wonderfully preserved aureus.

The reverse legend makes it clear that the coin celebrates an adventus (ceremonial entry into a city) of Probus. Since the type was struck at Siscia, it might at first be tempting to link it to the emperor's Gothic campaign on the Danube frontier in A.D. 277. Probus almost certainly would have stopped at this important Pannonian city before or after driving the Goths back across the great river. However, as other known adventus types of Probus struck at Siscia are usually dated to A.D. 277, it seems more likely that this coin refers to Probus' entry into Rome later that year. The adventus at Rome was of special symbolic significance because it showed that his position as emperor, established and maintained by force of arms, was sanctioned by the Senate. Probus appears on the reverse of the coin, flanked by personifications of the two original sources of his power — Victory (over Florian and the Goths) and the army — and advancing into the city towards the full legitimacy that the Senate could bestow. It is notable that while this coin is unique, it is associated with another aureus that depicts the mounted emperor led by Victory, but without the soldier behind.

The reverse type of this solidus struck at Arles is almost as interesting and enigmatic as it is rare. A tall column inscribed SAPIENTIA ("wisdom") stands surrounded by the attributes of Minerva, the Roman goddess of wisdom. Her bird, the owl, is perched atop the column while her helmet, shield, and spear are propped at its base. The entire type is surrounded by a legend lauding the "most farsighted emperor." The precise political context of the type is uncertain, but considering that it is dated to A.D. 313 one wonders whether it might not refer to the Edict of Milan, which was promulgated by Constantine and his eastern colleague, Licinius, in that year. This important imperial edict guaranteed the full rights of Christian citizens of the Roman Empire and ordered the restoration of property taken from them during the previous persecutions. In A.D. 302-303, the eastern Augustus, Diocletian, and his Caesar, Galerius, had ordered increasingly severe persecutions of Christians out of fear that their religion was a threat to the protection afforded to the empire by the traditional Roman gods. Suspected Christians were required to make sacrifice to the gods like everyone else, but if they refused they faced confiscation of property, imprisonment, and death — sometimes by horrific means. Galerius ended the persecutions in A.D. 311 when he issued his Edict of Toleration. This edict granted legal status to Christianity, but did nothing to restore property or undo any of the damage of the pervious persecutions. The Edict of Milan, however, attempted to restore social and religious stability in the empire by applying justice to the wronged Christians. Constantine subsequently began to favor Christians, built churches, and founded his new capital, Constantinople, as a Christian city. In 380, the emperors Theodosius I, Gratian, and Valentinian II proclaimed the Edict of Thessalonica, which made Christianity the official religion of the Roman Empire. Constantine had been farsighted indeed.

While this solidus issue is dated to the period from July to the end of A.D. 316, the reverse legend, which describes Constantine as VICTORIOSO SEMPER ("always victorious"), might associate it with a donative distributed following the Battle of Cibalae, which took place between Constantine and his eastern colleague, Licinius, on 8 October A.D. 316. Although the two Augusti had made a marriage alliance in A.D. 313, their relationship deteriorated once the threat of Licinius' rival, Maximinus, was removed. A plot against Constantine that involved Bassianus, and his brother, Senecio, a high official in the service of Licinius provided the casus belli. Bassianus was executed, but when Constantine demanded that Senecio be handed over to him, Licinius refused. Constantine responded by invading Licinius' territory in Pannonia with an army of 20,000 men. Licinius met him at Cibalae with a much larger force, but after a full day of fighting, a final cavalry charge by Constantine won the battle. Licinius reportedly lost almost half his army in the struggle and was forced to flee.

The remarkable nimbate facing portrait type represents a novelty for the coinage of Constantine. A similar portrait type was introduced wearing consular robes for issues celebrating his decennalia (10-year anniversary of his reign) in A.D. 315-early 316, but here the emperor is cuirassed in accord with the reverse legend advertising his military victories. It should be noted that although the nimbus became a means of marking out saints in Christian art, the use of this attribute here should not be connected to Constantine's growing favor towards Christians. Despite the tradition of Constantine's conversion before the Battle of the Milvian Bridge in A.D. 313, when this solidus was struck the emperor was still issuing coins that honored Sol Invictus as his patron (e.g. RIC VII Ticinum 56 and 61). Therefore, the nimbus here should be understood as a visual sign of Constantine's godlike power as emperor following an iconographic tradition that can be traced back to coins of Antoninus Pius (139-161; cf. RIC 765).

There has been some disagreement over the identity of the turreted female figure offering the wreath to Constantine. Some scholars have seen her as the generic personification of a Roman city (perhaps Ticinum here?) or as Res Publica, the personification of the Roman state. The latter view seems most attractive in light of the medallions of Magnentius (A.D. 350-353; cf. Gnecchi 1) with the legend LIBERATOR REI PVBLICAE and featuring a similar turreted female figure bowing before the mounted usurper.

This incredible medallion was struck for distribution as a military donative as part of the celebrations commemorating Constantine's decennalia (10-year anniversary of his reign) in A.D. 315. It features what is arguably one of the most iconic, dramatic, and rare numismatic portraits of Constantine I. As with many special issues associated with the decennalia, the usual profile imperial portrait has been eschewed in favor of an arresting frontal portrait that seems to stare at the viewer. The ornate and flamboyantly crested helmet features the Chi-Rho – a monogram formed by the first two Greek letters in the name "Christ." According to Eusebius and Lactantius, this monogram appeared to Constantine in a vision before his final showdown with his rival, Maxentius, at the Milvian Bridge (A.D. 312). Advised that, "in this sign he would conquer," Constantine had the monogram painted on the shields of his soldiers and marched to victory and the prize of Rome. Eusebius further adds that later in life Constantine took to wearing a helmet with the Chi-Rho monogram emblazoned on it because it was felt that this monogram afforded him added divine protection in battle. The helmet depicted here must surely be the same as the one described by Eusebius. Its apotropaic powers were augmented still further after A.D. 326-328 with the addition of a crown made from a nail believed to be from the True Cross.

Constantine's pose, holding a shield emblazoned with the wolf suckling Romulus and Remus and with his right hand leading a horse by the bridle, presents him as the master of Rome, which was a significant feature of the decennalia celebrations. Part of the festivities included the dedication of the Arch of Constantine in Rome to commemorate his victory over Maxentius three years earlier. Like the Chi-Rho on the helmet, the celebrations also put on public display Constantine's Christian leanings. Although it had been expected that he would dedicate the arch with sacrifices to the traditional Roman gods, he refused to do so out of respect for the Christian God whose intervention won him the city. The portrait with horse and shield on this medallion also serves to advertise Constantine as the legitimate and unchallenged Augustus in the West. It closely mimics a similar portrait type used for gold medallions of Maximian I (Gnecchi 18), the western Augustus of Diocletian's tetrarchic system, who also happened to be the father of the defeated Maxentius and the father-in-law of Constantine.

The reverse type may represent the occasion on which the medallion was given out, since Constantine appears standing on a dais with Victory surrounded by four infantrymen and four cavalrymen. What better way to preserve the SALVS REIPVBLICAE ("health of the state") mentioned in the legend than by a distribution of valuable, attractive, and symbolically significant medallions to the commanders of the army?

As the younger daughter of the emperor Maximian, Fausta was born into a political existence. While still a child - perhaps even an infant - she was betrothed to Constantine, the son of her father's Caesar, Constantius. It was a classic political union made long before Fausta was eligible for marriage. When she eventually married Constantine in 307, it was, again, a matter of political opportunism: Constantine had taken control of the Western provinces after his father's death, and Fausta's father, Maximian, now co-ruler with his son in Italy, was in need of an ally. By this time Fausta would have reached an appropriate age for marriage - probably between 15 and 18 years old - yet she was still much younger than her husband, who was perhaps 35 years old and who already had a grown child from a previous union. During the first decade of their marriage they produced no children, but thereafter Fausta gave birth to five children who grew to maturity. Three were boys, all of whom succeeded Constantine upon his death in 337. But in the early stages of their lives a more prominent character, Constantine's first son Crispus, must have been considered most likely to succeed, for he was substantially older than Fausta's sons and he was popular with the army. With this in mind, there is good reason to believe that Fausta was opposed to the promotion of her stepson Crispus, fearing her own sons would suffer as a result. The outcome of this irreconcilable state of affairs was a family tragedy in 326, less than two years after Constantine and Crispus had combined efforts to eliminate their last rival, Licinius. In the summer or fall of 326 two executions occurred in quick succession: Crispus was killed after a swift trial on charges that remain a mystery, and Fausta was suffocated in a steam bath for reasons that are not known, but are rightly associated with the execution of Crispus. Constantine suppressed the facts in these cases, and there was no official account of their deaths. Indeed, by the end of the 4th century John Chrysostom (Ep. ad Philipp., 4, 15, 5) apparently believed Fausta had died in the amphitheatre, where she was devoured by wild beasts. But this solidus was struck at a happier time, soon after the title of Augusta was awarded to Fausta and her mother-in-law Helena, seemingly on November 8, 324. Prior to this event, both women possessed the lesser title Nobilissima Femina, and, except for a special issue of silver half-argentei for Fausta at her wedding in 307, their coinage had been limited to a single issue of billon coins struck c. 318 to 319 at Thessalonica. The new coinage for Fausta and Helena was produced on a grand scale at mints across the empire, and this time it included gold solidi and medallions. Constantine was careful to distinguish the presumed roles of his wife and mother by identifying Helena with securitas publica (the "well-being of the State") and Fausta with salus publica and spes publica (the "health of the State" and the "hope of the State"). Both of Fausta's types reflect her role of motherhood, for the health and the hope of the empire, simultaneously, were seen as essential elements of the well-being and success of the Constantinian dynasty.

Much like Germanicus three centuries earlier, Crispus was a young man of tremendous potential who was cut down in his prime due to family intrigues. As the eldest son of Constantine - and the only one from his early association with Minervina - Crispus was at least twenty years older than any of the three stepbrothers his father later sired by Crispus' stepmother Fausta. Needless to say, this greatly concerned Fausta, who not only wanted the throne for her three boys, but who no doubt feared for their safety until they became old enough to defend themselves. Making matters worse for Fausta were the obvious talents of Crispus. In the First Licinian War (316-317) he had distinguished himself as a skilful naval commander by winning a great victory that allowed his father to defeat Licinius much sooner than might otherwise have been expected. Crispus clearly had an enemy in Fausta, and one that proved more difficult to defeat than an armada. By popular account Fausta accused her stepson of making uninvited advances on her, which so incensed Constantine that he called for a trial in which Crispus was found guilty of the charge and was executed. Constantine later came to regret his hasty decision, for he soon put Fausta to death on the belief that she had invented the charge, and he erected a large golden statue of Crispus, honouring him as "the son whom I unjustly condemned".

Born on 7 August A.D. 317, Constantius II was the second of the three sons born to Constantine I and Fausta. At the ripe age of seven, he was appointed to the rank of Caesar at Nicomedia on 13 November A.D. 324. This outstanding multiple-solidus medallion was struck to commemorate his elevation and was probably distributed as a donative while the young Caesar was at Nicomedia with his father. After all, nothing helps to cement the loyalty of the army to a young and inexperienced leader like beautiful gold.

Despite the extreme youth of Constantius II, the stunning obverse portrait represents him as a seasoned warrior, fully prepared for battle. He wears a cuirass and cradles a parazonium in his arm while he carries a globe and Victory in his hand, all of which serve to express the imperial hopes for the young Caesar. The cuirass with small but the prominent gorgoneion on the chest together with the plain diadem that Constantius II wears connect him to Alexander the Great, who was similarly depicted and frequently imitated by Roman emperors as a means of illustrating their own greatness. Other coin portraits also represent Constantine with a plain diadem and an elevated gaze, which also play on the theme of Alexander the Great. The plain diadem on the solidus of Constantius II is a clear departure from the usual laurel wreath used to indicate the portrait of a Caesar on coins of the late third and early fourth centuries. The parazonium also seems to cast Constantius II as a living representation of Virtus, the Roman personification of manliness and martial skill who often appears as a cuirassed figure cradling this sheathed weapon. At the same time, the connection to Virtus also plays on the theme of Alexander the Great. It was a common rhetorical exercise in antiquity to debate whether the greatness of Alexander should be attributed to his fortune (Fortuna) or to his virtue (Virtus). Clearly Constantine (and no doubt all of Alexander's other Roman imitators) preferred the side of Virtus in this question since it associated greatness with the qualities of the individual rather than uncontrollable external forces.

The reverse legend names Constantius II as "prince of the youth" – a traditional title given to imperial heirs to the throne since the time of Augustus (27 B.C.-A.D. 14). The type depicting the Caesar with standards visually presents him as having the support of the army and illustrates his right to command it. This too is traditional, with similar types used on coins already in the second quarter of the third century

When Constantine the Great died in A.D. 337, his sons, Constantius II, Constantine II, and Constans divided the empire among themselves. Constantius II took possession of Constantinople and the East while his brothers squabbled over the West. By A.D. 340, Constans had killed Constantine II and in A.D. 350 Constans was murdered by the usurper Magnentius. Constantius II thenceforth ruled alone over of the entire empire. It was a reign troubled by usurpations in the West, division between Orthodox and Arian Christians, and a long, grinding war against the Sasanian Persian Empire. Nevertheless, Constantius II managed to hold the vast Roman Empire together until his death in A.D. 361. This gold medallion, which was converted into a jewellery pendant in antiquity, was struck as a military donative distributed to the army to celebrate the vicennalia (twentieth anniversary) of his reign. The debasement of the silver currency made it necessary for emperors of the late third and fourth centuries to provide regular gifts of gold to the soldiers, as this was the only true store of value. Donatives were usually distributed at the beginning of the New Year and were connected to imperial anniversaries and vows undertaken for the security of the emperor and the state. The generous provision of gold to the troops was an important security measure for emperors who were always at risk of assassination when the army was discontented. The obverse of this 3-solidi multiple carries a portrait of Constantius II in the distinctive Late Antique artistic style, which aimed more at capturing the spiritual character rather than the true physical likeness. The large pearl diadem is a far cry from the simple laurel wreath worn by earlier emperors and reflects the evolution of the emperor into an oriental-style monarch that took place in the late third century. The reverse type is a new variation on types previously employed for solidi that featured Victory seated on a pile of arms holding the left side of an inscribed shield while a Cupid held up the right side (e.g., RIC VII 44 [Aquileia], etc.). On this medallion Victory now stands up and illustrates her universal dominion by placing one foot on a globe while Cupid still holds the right side of the shield. The use of Cupid as a prop for the shield is remarkable considering that Constantius II was a Christian emperor. In the art and coinage of the pagan Roman Empire, Cupid was often present in scenes depicting Venus with the shield of Mars, making one wonder whether the die engravers consciously looked back to the pre-Christian past to design the type of this medallion and the related solidi.

In Procopius we have one of the more legitimate rebels in Roman history. When Julian II was killed in battle against the Persians in the summer of 363, it was Procopius, a relative of Julian II and one of his campaign commanders, who bore his body back to Cilicia for burial. Furthermore, it was rumoured that he had been named successor. Despite all this, the divided army did not recognize Procopius' claim and selected Jovian, who seems to have been neutral in the east-west divide within the ranks. Another reason Procopius might have been denied was his probable sympathy toward paganism, which we might presume from his close association with Julian and his choice to wear a beard. Because of his prominence, Procopius was in grave danger and so went into hiding, emerging only when the new eastern emperor Valens was travelling to Syria. Much was working in favour of Procopius: not only was Valens far away, but the locals in Constantinople were desperate for relief from Petronius, the corrupt father-in-law of Valens who had been left behind in 'command. Procopius' revolt was easily sparked, but proved impossible to maintain. The contemporary historian Ammianus reports that Procopius tried to extend his rule into the strategically important Illyricum through the offer of an 'accession donative', but apparently even this failed. With the passage of time Procopius' support in the army eroded until he left the capital with what remained of his army to confront Valens. The pitched battle Procopius no doubt considered his only chance for survival never materialized, as he was handed over to Valens after the 'battle of Nacolia' in the summer of 366 and was executed.

The daughter of Bauto the Frank, a general and consul under Valentinian I, Aelia Eudoxia was married to Arcadius with the help of the court euruch Eutropius. Her position was one of great power, and she used it to dominate palace politics as well as her weak husband. A very pious woman who often argued with the Church's leadership, Eudoxia gave birth to five children, among them the future emperor Theodosius II, and the chaste empress Aelia Pulcheria, wife of the future emperor Marcian. After only a decade of marriage and deep involvement in court affairs, Eudoxia died in the midst of a miscarriage in October, 404.

No woman in the Roman Empire could compare with the nobility of Licinia Eudoxia. As an Augusta who was the daughter of the eastern emperor Theodosius II and the wife of the western emperor Valentinian III, she was among the most influential people of late antiquity.

Though Licinia Eudoxia had coins struck for her with the usual profile portrait, we have here a remarkable solidus with a full-facing bust, adorned with strings of pearls and a radiate crown, the rays of which flank a cross. The powerful imagery of this portrait, though impressive on our coin, must have been even more imposing in the flesh with the radiant colors of her richly woven garments and an overpowering display of pearls, precious stones and her golden crown.

Frontal portraits on Roman coins were a rarity before the reign of Constantius II (337-361), at which point emperors came to be routinely shown full-facing, holding a shield and spear. But beyond this standard type, facing portraits were still uncommon even in the 5th Century, and this one of Eudoxia is of great iconographic value.

The date of this solidus is a matter of speculation. There are two main issues of solidi bearing frontal portraits of Eudoxia: the first, struck at Ravenna and Rome, bears the obverse and reverse type of this piece (RIC 2016 and 2023); the second issue, from Rome (RIC 2046), bears a reverse celebrating the tricennalia of her husband Valentianian III and has a portrait of a different character, for Eudoxia wears consular garb and her crown has two large triangular projections rather than six radiate spikes

The second issue is dateable to late 454 through early 455, for Valentian III entered his eighth and final consulship on January 1, 455 and he was then celebrating his tricennalia, the period of which would have been October 23, 454 through March 16, 455 (when he was murdered in a palace coup organized by his successor, Petronius Maximus).

The relation of that consular solidus of Rome to the present coin (and its sister-issue of Rome) is a matter of speculation; except for the fact that they all bear a facing portrait of Eudoxia, there are few similarities in style, and, as already noted, the details of the busts vary.

Like many of Rome's emperors, Avitus was hailed Augustus outside of Italy. In his case the location was the provincial capital of Arles, and the circumstances were grim. In September, 454 the emperor Valentinian III murdered his magister militum Aëtius, which was repaid by his own murder six months later. Valentinian was replaced by Petronius Maximus, a usurper whose tyranny invited an invasion of Italy by the Vandals, who sacked Rome on June 1. The void in the summer of 455 was considerable: there was no emperor in the West, and every portable item of value in the capital (including royal hostages) had been carted away by the Vandals. It was at this moment that Avitus courageously became emperor of the West. He did so with the support of the Visigothic king Theoderic II, but he only received the consent of the Eastern emperor Marcian later in the year, when he had made his way to Italy. Avitus had strong connections with the Visigothic court at Tolouse, for whom he was serving as an imperial envoy. He also had extensive experience in government and had acquired military experience under Avitus, one of the most accomplished soldiers of his age. Without Avitus to lead the western armies and fleets, Avitus found a new magister militum in Ricimer, who in 456 scored a major victory against the Vandals off the coast of Corsica. The talent of the new commander was a double-edged sword, for Ricimer became the most important man in the West for the next 16 years. Of more direct interest to Avitus was the fact that Ricimer soon deposed him and replaced him with a sequence of puppet emperors. Local circumstances began to weigh against Avitus, including a famine in Rome and the loss of support from the Visigoths, who were occupied with a war against the Suevi in Spain. All the while, the popularity of Ricimer was on the rise because of his follow-up victory over the Vandals. Finally, on October 17, 456, Avitus was deposed by Ricimer, who made him bishop of Piacenza, an appointment he did not long survive. This solidus was struck at the mint in Arles, which Avitus reopened using workers from Ravenna. Thus, it should not surprise us to see the mint signature of Arles (AR), but the style of Ravenna. Avitus strong ties with the Visigoths also resulted in a large production of imitations of his solidi and tremisses, which presumably were struck at Tolouse for distribution among the Visigoths.

Born to Greek or Armenian parents in Cappadocia in 539, Maurice grew up to become secretary to Tiberius (II), the comes excubitorum (commander of the imperial bodyguard) at Constantinople. When Tiberius II was appointed Caesar in 574, Maurice was appointed to his old position. He loyally served Tiberius II, and waged a successful war against the Sasanian Empire on his behalf. Maurice's successes brought him elevated social position, and the hand of Tiberius' daughter, Constantina, Tiberius II died in 582, leaving Maurice to take up the reigns of power. Unfortunately for Maurice, the empire that his father-in-law left him was almost completely bankrupt, still embroiled in conflict with Persia, and suffering from invasion by the Avars and Slavs. The new emperor had no other choice but to take up his military mantle once again and try to bring an end to the destructive wars. Thanks to a civil war within the Sasanian dynasty and a decade of hard fighting, Maurice was able to bring a successful conclusion to the war against Persia in 591. This conflict, which ended with Maurice joining forces with the Sasanian usurper, Khusrau II, won for the Byzantine empire long-contested territories in Armenia and the remission of tribute formerly paid to maintain peace. Once the Persian war was settled, Maurice turned his attention to the Avars and Slavs in the Balkans. In a series of campaigns fought from 591 to 594, these barbarians were pushed back and Byzantine frontier defenses restored along the Danube. Despite these successes, Maurice was chronically short on money to govern and defend the empire from its many external enemies. As a cost saving measure, in 602, the emperor decreed that the army should continue campaigning beyond the Danube rather than return to winter quarters. At this the exhausted troops began to mutiny under the leadership of an officer named Phocas. The military disturbances sparked riots in Constantinople and Maurice attempted to flee to Nicomedia with his family. However, Phocas and the army soon arrived and captured them before they could make good their escape. It is reported that the cruel Phocas, who was proclaimed the new emperor, forced Maurice to watch the execution of his six sons before he was himself executed. The violent death of Maurice was immediately used as a pretext by Khusrau II to begin a new Persian-Byzntine war. With the fall of the axe, Phocas had undone the greatest of Maurice's triumphs.

This rare gold solidus of Maurice Tiberius follows the basic iconographic model established during the reign of Anastasius I (491-518). The emperor appears on the obverse helmeted and armored in order to defend the empire against its enemies, but also carries a globus cruciger to indicate his universal authority sanctioned by Heaven. The reverse celebrates the victories of Maurice and Theodosius (his eldest son who had been made co-emperor in 590) and depicts a winged figure who could still be read as the old pagan personification of Victory, but was recast as a Christian angel through the addition of a globus cruciger and a sceptre topped with a Chi-Rho.
